Scope and sufficiency of transcript. The transcript must contain all the matters and proceedings necessary to a determination of the questions involved in the appeal,[73] and should not include matters which are not necessary to a clear understanding of the case[74] or be encumbered with useless repetitions and irrelevant matter.[75] Subject to these qualifications, if necessary for purposes of review, it is the duty of appellant to furnish the reviewing court with a full and complete transcript of the whole record of the court below,[76] including copies of the material pleadings,[77] and of the verdict and the judgment or final order appealed from.[78] The papers and documents incorporated in the transcript of the record on appeal should be arranged in chronological order.[79]

"Short record"

Where a so-called short record presents all the facts on which the district court acted in granting a motion to dismiss a complaint, it is sufficient to permit of review of the judgment entered, even though it is a short record.—Karl Kiefer Mach. As determined by act of congress or rule of court

What shall constitute the transcript on which a case may be carried to the circuit court of appeals is a matter regulated by the acts of congress and the rules and regulations of that court, which the court below has no power to change, and it cannot overhaul the record, after final determination, without the consent of appellee for the convenience of appellant or to save him expense. —Smith v. court is of the opinion that original papers or exhibits should be inspected by the appellate court or sent to such court in lieu of copies, it may make such order therefor as it may deem proper.[80]

Supplemental transcript. Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 75 (h), if any material matter is omitted from the record by error or mistake or is misstated therein, the circuit court of appeals, on a proper suggestion or of its own motion, may, if necessary, direct that a supplemental record be certified by the clerk of the district court.[81]

Transcripts on separate appeals and cross appeals. Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 75 (k), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, where more than one appeal is taken to the same court from the same judgment, a single record on appeal should be prepared containing all the matter designated or agreed on by the parties, without duplication;[82] and, even under the former practice, the record settled on a former appeal could be made a part of the record and used on a second appeal in the same case, without a restatement of the case.[83] On a consolidated appeal from several judgments, a transcript containing only one of such judgments has been held erroneous where it violates a rule of court.[84] Where a cause has been remanded by the appellate court for a new trial, and an appeal is taken from the judgment or decree rendered at such new trial, the transcript of the record need contain only that part of the proceedings which has taken place subsequent to the remandment of the cause.[85]

g. Authentication and Certification

The transcript of the record must be authenticated or certified, usually by the judge of the trial court, in the manner and form required by statute or rule of court.

It is a general requirement that the transcript of the record on appeal, including matters contained therein, must be properly authenticated or certified; otherwise it cannot be considered by the ap-

80. Practice under court rules

(1) Appellate court rules, requiring the record to contain all necessary papers and exhibits, apply only to printed or written documents, and, where it is impossible to reproduce such papers without great inconvenience, they can by a proper order be sent up in the original.—Stephenson v. National Bank of Winter Haven, C.C.A.Fla., 39 F.2d 16—Krauss Bros. Lumber Co. v. Mellon, C.C.A.Ala., 18 F.2d 369, certiorari granted 48 S.Ct. 35, 275 U.S. 513, 72 L.Ed. 400, and reversed on other grounds 48 S.Ct. 358, 276 U.S. 386, 72 L.Ed. 620, amended 48 S.Ct. 527, 72 L.Ed. 1018, conformed to, C.C.A., 30 F.2d 901, certiorari denied 49 S.Ct. 513, 279 U.S. 872, 73 L.Ed. 1008.

(2) Such an order does not dispense with requirement that the papers be copied in record, and a record merely referring to documents, filed in evidence or for identification, but not printed in record or ordered sent up in original, violates such rules.—Stephenson v. National Bank of Winter Haven, C.C.A.Fla., 39 F.2d 16.

(3) The judge is not authorized to make an order incorporating original papers introduced in evidence in the record, instead of copies, merely for the purpose of saving expense to the parties, nor unless in his opinion an inspection by the appellate court of the originals, as distinguished from authenticated copies, is either necessary or will be useful or aidful in the determination of the appeal.—Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Brennan & Co., C.C.Ky., 156 F. 213.

81. U.S.—McLean v. Federal Land Bank of Omaha, C.C.A.Iowa, 130 F.2d 123—Drybrough v. Ware, C.C.A.Ky., 111 F.2d 548.

U.S.—McLean v. Federal Land Bank of Omaha, supra.

Motion for supplemental record denied

Appellants' motion for supplemental and corrected record, occasioned by a statement in appellees' brief to the effect that it was appellants' duty to support appellants' motion for a determination of appellants' rights under issues framed by the pleadings by evidence and to incorporate such evidence in the transcript, would be denied, where there was no contention by either side that such evidence had been introduced.—Speer v. Rural Special School Dist. No. 50 of Norphlet, Union County, C.C.A.Ark., 100 F.2d 202.

Supplementary transcript of omitted evidence, under Equity Rules, rule 75.—Williamson v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Corporation, C.C.A.Ark., 59 F.2d 918, modifying, D.C., Williamson v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Co., 51 F.2d 551.

Amending and correcting defects and omissions generally see infra subdivision i of this section.

Permitting record to stand after redesignation of contents

Where circuit court of appeals, on plaintiff's appeal reversed judgment dismissing the suit after vacation of judgment for plaintiff, and the government then continued with its appeal from original judgment for plaintiff, court permitted the printed record presented in plaintiff's appeal to stand as a record on government's appeal, after redesignation of its contents and certification by clerk of district court.—Miller v. U. S., supra.

83. U.S.—Stennick v. Jones, C.C.A.Or., 282 F. 161.

Record certified by trial judge in connection with appeal by defendants as against whom bill was dismissed could be considered on plaintiff's appeal.—Aberly v. Craven County, N. C., C.C.A.N.C., 70 F.2d 52.

A circuit court of appeals could not make its own record for the hearing of a case on appeal by authorizing the withdrawal from its files of the record on a former appeal, and permitting it to be refiled as a part of the record on a subsequent appeal in the same case.—Merriman v. Chicago, D. & V. R. Co., Ill., 120 F. 240, 56 C.C.A. 536.

pellate court,[86] or the judgment will be affirmed.[87] This authentication or certification applies to evidence made a part of the record,[88] and to papers included in, referred to, or annexed to the transcript.[89] The authentication or certification usually should be made by the trial judge,[90] and not by the stenographer who reported the case,[91] except that a stenographer, who has been properly appointed or agreed on, may certify to the correctness of his transcript.[92]

The authentication or certification must, in form and substance, be in conformity with the requirements of the applicable statute or rule of court,[93] such as that the certificate should affirm that the transcript contains a full, true, and complete copy of all of the proceedings,[94] although it is not necessary that the certificate should be framed in the exact language of the statute or rule.[95]

(2) Transmission and filing

(1) Printing

The part of the record to be printed, the manner of printing, and the supervision thereof, are controlled by the rules of the court to which the appeal is taken; but the type, paper, and dimensions of the printed matter must conform to the rules of the supreme court relating to records on appeal.

which the appeal is taken govern as to what part of the record shall be printed[96] and the manner of the printing, and supervision thereof;[97] but the type, paper, and dimensions of the printed matter in the circuit court of appeals must conform to the rules of the supreme court relating to records on appeal to that court.[98] A question as to whether all matter transmitted to the appellate court is to be printed is for that court to decide;[99] and ordinarily a part of the record which has not been printed, as required by rule of court, should not be considered by the appellate court,[1] although the court may consider it, under special circumstances.[2] Accordingly, a failure to comply with the requirement as to the printing of the record will not necessarily entail the dismissal of the appeal without regard to the merits of the controversy.[3] Additional time will not be granted appellant to comply with the requirement, as to printing where it appears that nothing would be gained by him except delay.[4]

(2) Transmission and Filing

The record on appeal should be transmitted to, and filed in, the appellate court within the time prescribed therefor, or within a properly granted extension thereof. A failure to file the record within the proper time does not invalidate the record, but merely furnishes the basis for appropriate action by the appellate court.

Under the provisions of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 73 (g), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, the record on appeal must be filed with the appellate court within forty days from the date of the filing of notice of appeal,[5] and not from the final date on which appellant could have given notice of appeal.[6]

Extension of time for transmission and filing. The district court, under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 73 (g), may, in its discretion and with or without motion or notice, extend the time for filing the record on appeal,[7] provided its or-

(1) Under Act Febr. 13, 1911 c 47 § 1, 28 U.S.C.A. § 865, which has been modified by Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 75(1), appellant was entitled to have the record printed and was not obliged to let the clerk of court have it printed or supervise the printing of it; and a rule of court committing the supervision of the printing to the clerk of court could not be enforced where it ran counter to the statute.—In re King, C.C.A.Ala., 73 F.2d 175.

(2) This statute did not affect the power of the supreme court to regulate a district court as to the manner of making up and printing the record on an appeal to a circuit court of appeals.—Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Matter of discretion

Where parties to appeal transmit as physical exhibits matters capable of reproduction in printed record, failure to include such in printed record or to obtain order suspending rule as to printing makes them no part of record which reviewing court is compelled to consider, but it is matter of pure discretion whether court will consider such unprinted, although transmitted, matters.—Cherry-Burrell Corporation v. Where there is no apparent merit in appeal to warrant waiving the rule of court requiring printing of the record, appellee's motion to dismiss the appeal may be sustained.—Richardson v. Authority of another judge to extend time

(1) A judge of another district holding court for the resident judge may make an order in a case previ-

der for extension is made before the expiration of the period for filing as originally prescribed, or as extended by a previous order;[8] except that, by reason of the general authority conferred by Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 6 (b), to enlarge the period of time fixed by the rules for doing acts required to be done by litigants, the court may, on motion after notice to appellee, permit the record to be filed after the prescribed or extended period, if the failure to file it within such period is shown to the satisfaction of the court to be the result of excusable neglect.[9] In no event, however, can the district court extend the time to a day more than ninety days from the date of the first notice of appeal.[10]

Extension beyond the ninety-day period is within the province of the circuit court of appeals where it is in the interest of justice to make such an extension,[11] the motion for the extension is made within a previous extension period,[12] and the reasons for the extension are manifestly meritorious.[13] Such an extension of the period of time for filing the record in the appellate court may be made by the circuit court of appeals as a whole,[14] and cannot be made by a single judge, except tentatively for the court and subject to its approval.[15] An irregularity in this respect may be overlooked by the court, in its discretion, if the reasons for a further extension are meritorious and such extension will not prejudice appellee.[16]

Effect of failure to file in time. By virtue of the provision of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 73 (a), to the effect that the failure of appellant to take any of the further steps, after the filing of a notice of appeal, does not affect the validity of the appeal, a failure of appellant, under rule 73 (g), to file his record in time does not invalidate his appeal, but merely furnishes the basis for such action as the appellate court may deem appropriate.[17] Ac-

ously tried by the resident judge extending the time for filing the record, the citation for which had been signed by the resident judge.—Hall v. McKinnon, Alaska, 193 F. 572, 113 C.C.A. 440.

(2) Judge of supreme court of Puerto Rico appointed by president and authorized to perform all duties of regular judge of United States district court for Puerto Rico was held authorized, in absence of judge of district court, to extend time of filing of transcript of record in circuit court of appeals, notwithstanding that he was not judge who signed citation as required by rule of circuit court of appeals, since such rule must yield to act of congress. —Despiau v. U. S. Casualty Co., C.C.A. Puerto Rico, 87 F.2d 270.

(3) Chief justice of supreme court of Puerto Rico having signed citation of appeal, another justice, even though acting chief justice, was unauthorized under court rule to extend time for filing transcript.—Gutierrez v. Longpre, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 84 F. 2d 43.

Request for extension of time within which to file record on appeal must be made within forty days from date of filing notice of appeal, in absence of previous extension of time, and hence motion for extension forty-nine days after filing notice of appeal, although less than forty days after expiration of time originally available for filing notice of appeal, is too late.—Bluford v. Canada, supra.

cordingly, notwithstanding the record has not been filed within the prescribed or extended time, under rule 73 (g) as well as under former similar rules of court, the circuit court of appeals, in its discretion, may consider the appeal,[18] and may refuse to dismiss the appeal on this ground,[19] particularly where the failure to file the record within the proper time is excusable,[20] or where, before the motion to dismiss is filed and notice thereof is given, the record has been actually filed.[21] On the other hand, if it appears that the failure to file the record within the proper time was not due to any fault on the part of appellee and appellee was without other excuse, the court may, and ordinarily should, dismiss the appeal.[22]

(1) Effect of Defects or Omissions

Defects or omissions in the record on appeal may constitute ground for dismissing the appeal, affirming the judgment, or the taking of other action by the appellate court. Immaterial defects or omissions are not fatal.

If the record on appeal is so imperfect, by reason of defects and omissions therein, that the questions involved and the rights of the parties cannot properly be determined, the appeal may be dismissed,[23] or, according to the decisions on the

Where record presents strongly arguable claim of error, and delay beyond time allowable by district court is not shown to have prejudiced appellee, court will entertain appeal.—Johnson v. Wilson, C.C.A. Nev., 118 F.2d 557.

Expiration of term

Where the time for filing a return to an appeal has expired without valid extension, but the return is actually filed or tendered for filing shortly thereafter, the circuit court of appeals has power to make a retroactive extension of time for filing the return, and will do so unless there is reason to the contrary and the court is not deprived of jurisdiction to allow the return to be filed a few days after the expiration of the time therefor, and to entertain the appeal, because the term to which the appeal was returnable has expired.—Moran v. question, the judgment below may be affirmed,[24] although in a proper case an opportunity may be afforded to correct the defects,[25] or the appellate court may remand the cause,[26] or reverse the judgment where the record fails to show facts essential to a proper decision of the case by the appellate court.[27] The power of dismissal of the appeal, however, generally should not be exercised unless the defect or omission arose from appellant's negligence or indifference,[28] and where, in case of an omission, good faith is shown, appellee may be directed to designate such additional papers, documents, and proof used on the hearing below as he deems necessary to a proper presentation of the case, and appellant may be ordered to file the same as a part of the record under penalty of a dismissal of the appeal.[29]

were burned while the case was pending below, and the transcript contains all the subsequent proceedings and as much of the prior record as has been reëstablished, and no appellant is to blame for not fully reëstablishing the record.[32]

Inclusion of immaterial matter. The inclusion of immaterial matter in the record on appeal is not necessarily fatal, and ordinarily the appellate court may disregard it or strike it out,[33] although the costs incident to including such matter may be taxed against the party preparing and presenting the record.[34]

(2) Amendment and Correction

Defects or omissions, not of a jurisdictional character, in a record on appeal may be corrected by amendment by stipulation of the parties or by the lower court, or the amendment or correction may be ordered by the appellate court.

Defects or errors in the transcript of the record on appeal, unless they are of a jurisdictional character,[35] are as a rule amendable, in the discretion of the court;[36] but a motion for an amendment will be denied where movant shows no reason why the defect or omission could not have been presented to, and corrected in, the lower court.[37]

Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 75 (h), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, the parties may by stipulation correct a material omission or misstatement in the record.[38]

Jurisdiction of lower court. Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 75 (h), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, the district court has power only to correct and settle the record on appeal when a difference arises between the parties as to what occurred in the district court, so that the record may conform to the truth;[39] and, if anything material to either party is omitted from the record by error or accident or is misstated therein, the district court may direct that the omission or misstatement be corrected, either before or after the record is transmitted to the appellate court.[40] This power of the district court extends only to the correction of misstatements or actual omissions in the record;[41] it has no power to exclude from the record any matter occurring below which a party thinks should properly be in it,[42] or to add, or cause to be added, matter which did not occur in the lower court.[43]

Jurisdiction of appellate court. Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 75 (h), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, the circuit court of appeals has power to correct the record only as to what occurred in the district court,[44] and not to add to the record matter which never occurred in the court

44. U.S.—U. S. v. Kennedy, supra.

All questions as to occurrences below which should be included in the record must be presented to the appellate court except where a dispute below.[45] If anything material to either party is omitted from the record by accident or error, or is misstated therein, the appellate court, on a proper suggestion or on its own initiative, may direct that the omission or misstatement shall be corrected;[46] or it may, in its discretion, remit or remand the cause to the lower court for amendment or correction of the record.[47] However, while the appellate court may make orders for the correction of the record, it cannot itself make such correction or amendment,[48] except as to formal defects;[49] nor can it authorize or permit a change in the record so as to consider an appeal which in fact was not taken.[50]

Time of amendment. Except to the extent that a limitation may be imposed by rule of court,[51] amendments of the record must be applied for and made within a reasonable time, to be determined by the circumstances of the particular case.[52] It is too late to add to or alter the record after the appellate court has taken final action and ended the case in that court.[53]

(3) Waiver and Cure of Defects or Objections, and Striking Out

Defects in the appeal record may be waived, or they may be cured by reference to other papers on file, or the defective matter may be stricken out.

Defects or omissions, not of a jurisdictional character, in the record may be either expressly or im-arises as to the accuracy of certain portions of the record.—Treasure Imports v. Henry Amdur & Sons, C.C.A. N.Y., 127 F.2d 3, affirming, D.C., 40 F. Supp. 880—Westmoreland Asbestos Co. v. Johns-Manville Corporation, D. C.N.Y., 1 F.R.D. 249.

45. U.S.—Kennedy v. U. S., C.C.A., 115 F.2d 624.

Supervisory jurisdiction
The circuit court of appeals has no general authority over the district court to require that a portion of the evidence alleged to have been received below be certified to the appellate court, and that on receipt thereof the district court be required to make specified finding favorable to appellee in absence of showing that appellee ever applied to district court for amendment of findings.—Kennedy v. U. S., supra.

Prior to this rule, the practice was for the appellate court to allow or order such defects to be cured and omissions to be supplied as were not fatal to its own jurisdiction.—Kaw Valley Drainage Dist. of Wyandotte County v. Union Pac. R. Co., Kan., 163 F. 836, 90 C.C.A. 320—Hobbs v. National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City, N.Y., 93 F. 615, 35 C.C.A. 487—4 C.J. p 425 note 84 [a].

Absence of usual means of identifying evidence does not preclude remission of record for compliance with rule for including evidence.—Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Standard Asphalt & Rubber Co., Ill., 48 S.Ct. 183, 275 U.S. 372, 72 L.Ed. 318, reversing, C.C.A., 16 F.2d 751, certiorari granted 47 S.Ct. 576, 274 U.S. 728, 71 L.Ed. 1316.

Court rule requiring statement of testimony in condensed narrative form may be enforced by remanding case for compliance therewith.—U. S. v. Howard, C.C.A.Fla., 64 F.2d 533, followed in U. S. v. Dunaway, C.C.A. Fla., 64 F.2d 535.

Remand and not affirmance
Where trial judge made no special findings of fact and separate conclusions of law on denial of claim informally submitted in receivership proceedings, and record on appeal was insufficient to enable court to determine merits of claim, decree should not be affirmed for insufficiency of record, but cause should be remanded for complete findings of fact and conclusions of law.—Edwards v. pliedly waived,[54] or they may be cured by reference to other papers on file,[55] but a statement of an objection in the assignment of errors will not cure an omission thereof in the record.[56]

A transcript of the record may, on a proper application, be stricken in whole or in part where it is intrinsically defective,[57] or where it fails to comply with the statute or rule of court.[58] Matter improperly included in the transcript of the record on appeal may be stricken out on motion.[59] The appellate court may, in its discretion and in furtherance of justice, postpone the consideration of a motion to strike matter from the transcript until the final hearing of the cause on the merits.[60]

(4) Certiorari or Other Proceedings to Bring Up Record

The appellate court may, in its discretion, issue certiorari, or a similar order, to cause omitted or corrected portions of the record to be transmitted to the appellate court.

The appellate court may, in its discretion, issue a certiorari, or similar order, directing a full and complete record to be brought up, where there is shown to be a diminution in the record.[61] This writ is allowable only for surprise or excusable neglect,[62] and is employed generally to perfect a defective transcript or return, by bringing up matters of record omitted therefrom or defectively incorporated.[63] It will not be issued to bring up matters not of record or not considered in the court below.[64] An application or motion for a writ of certiorari, or similar order, must comply with the rule of court authorizing it,[65] and be within the time prescribed by order or rule of court.[66] A writ of certiorari to bring up a corrected record does not issue as a matter of right on mere suggestion of defects in the record, but the application must be supported by evidence of the defects alleged to exist.[67] Under a writ of certiorari from the appellate court directing the court below to correct and complete the record, that court has authority by a nunc pro tunc entry to make any changes in the record necessary to make it conform to the facts and recite accurately what was done.[68]

j. Conclusiveness and Effect of Record

The record on appeal is generally conclusive evidence of the proceedings in the lower court.

Generally speaking, the record filed for the purpose of appeal imports absolute verity, and is the sole, conclusive, and unimpeachable evidence of the proceedings in the lower court,[69] and accordingly the appellate court must be governed by the record in deciding questions presented for review;[70] and the record cannot be contradicted or explained by affidavits or other evidence or matters dehors the record.[71] These rules, as to conclusiveness, apply to recitals in the record,[72] a case made or statement of facts, as a part of the record,[73] a statement of the evidence approved by the trial court,[74] and to the certificate, authorized by law, of the judge or clerk to the record or some part thereof.[75] If, however, the record is intrinsically defective in failing to recite essential facts it falls of its own weight.[76]

Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 75, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, as there is no provision for making an authentic statement of the proceedings not stenographically reported, or as to which no reporter's transcript is available, if appellant serves with his designation his account of the proceedings, such statement will be deemed correct unless his adversary serves a supplement, or takes its truth to the judge,[77] and if appellee files a supplemental statement of the evidence or proceedings, it too will be deemed agreed to unless taken to the Presumptively the transcript filed is correct, and the court has no power, by certiorari, on ex parte affidavits, to cause the record to be amended by inserting a paper which appellant claims was introduced before a master, but of which neither the master nor counsel for appellee has any recollection.—Randolph v. Allen, supra.

k. Questions Presented for Review

The appellate court is limited in its review to questions properly presented by the record, which also sets forth all related matters necessary to the determination of such questions.

As a rule of general application, the appellate court is limited in its review of a case to the consideration of such questions only as are properly presented by the record or the requisite part thereof,[80] and a question may be reviewed only where the record or the requisite part thereof contains or sets forth such matters relating thereto as will enable the appellate court to determine whether or not there is error in respect thereof.[81] If matters which are not a part of the record proper are not brought up in the manner required therefor, the review is limited to questions appearing on the record proper.[82]

Applications of rule. In accordance with the general rule, only where the record properly presents the question involved, and sets forth the evidence or other related matters necessary to its determination may the appellate court review questions relating to: the grounds and form of action,[83] and matters of defense;[84] the jurisdiction of the lower court;[85] a defect in process;[86] the pleadings,[87] including an amendment[88] or demurrer[89] thereto; the ruling on a motion for a continuance,[90] or on a

Admission or exclusion of evidence. Alleged error in the admission of evidence will be considered only where the record shows the evidence admitted,[5] and the fact that it was admitted,[6] and, when necessary to a review of a ruling on the admissibility of particular evidence, other evidence admitted should be included in the record.[7] Where evidence is admitted subject to objection to its competency and admissibility, the record must show whether the evidence was finally received or not, and whether or not the objection was overruled in order to obtain a review of the point.[8] The admission of expert testimony may be reviewed only where the record discloses a factual foundation for the expert witness' conclusion.[9] Rulings on the admissibility of evidence on cross-examination will be reviewed only where the record contains enough of the testimony in chief to enable the court to see whether the rulings were erroneous.[10]

Alleged error in the exclusion of evidence will be considered only where the record shows what such evidence would have been or otherwise preserves such evidence.[11] Error in excluding oral testimony will be reviewed only where the record shows what the testimony would have been, or what was proposed to be proved by the question asked,[12] unless the question itself indicates what the answer would be.[13] Alleged error in excluding documentary evidence will not be reviewed, where the record fails to preserve the document or the contents thereof.[14]

Sufficiency of evidence. The sufficiency of the evidence will be reviewed by the appellate court only where the record or the appropriate part thereof properly raises or presents such question, and properly sets forth and presents all or substantially all of the evidence adduced at the trial,[15] except where the omitted part has no bearing on the question pre-

Testimony in another suit

If testimony of a witness in another suit was different from his testimony in the present suit, such inconsistency should be brought into the record by cross-examination, and in the absence thereof the objection will be disregarded on appeal.—Troy Wagon Works Co. v. Omission of exhibits, maps, or documentary evidence

The sufficiency of the evidence will not be considered, on appeal, where sented,[16] and except that, where there has been a view of the premises by the jury, it would seem impossible that the record be regarded as incorporating all of the evidence.[17] As a general rule alleged errors in the rulings of the court on an application for a dismissal or nonsuit,[18] or with regard to the direction of a verdict or an affirmative charge,[19] are reviewable only where the record contains all or substantially all the evidence on which the ruling is based.

It is a further essential to a review of the sufficiency of the evidence that the record or certificate affirmatively recite or show that it contains all the evidence, or, in other words, it must purport to contain all the evidence;[20] but this does not require a statement in express terms that all the evidence is set out; it is sufficient if it affirmatively appears from a reasonable construction of the language used that all, or substantially all, the material evidence is preserved.[21]

Instructions. Questions, involving instructions given or refused, will be considered on appeal only where the instructions involved are made a part of the record,[22] and, in case of a refusal of an instruction, where it affirmatively appears from the record that a proper request therefor was made.[23] It is further essential to a review of an assignment of error based on the giving or refusal of an instruction that all the instructions given be included in the record.[24]

If the instruction given or refused depends on the evidence adduced, and is proper or otherwise according to the proof, the appellate court will review the giving or the refusal of the instruction only where the record sets forth the evidence,[25] or at least as much thereof as bears on the instruction in question,[26] and affirmatively shows that it contains all the evidence on the subject matter of the instruction complained of.[27]

Findings and decisions. Errors in findings of fact or conclusions of law will be reviewed only where such errors are raised or shown by the record;[28] and, if the evidence, or at least the relevant part thereof, is not stated in the record, the correctness of the findings will not be reviewed except in so far as they are contradictory or conflicting or otherwise clearly erroneous,[29] or stated otherwise, if the evidence in the case is not properly brought up in the record, findings of the trial court will generally be accepted as correct.[30] The findings will not be reviewed where the record includes only as much of the evidence as was designated by appellant,[31] unless appellee does not call attention to any material evidence omitted from the record.[32]

Judgment. The validity or propriety of the judgment or order appealed from will be reviewed where the record sufficiently presents such question,[33] and, where the question is dependent on the evidence, it can be considered only where the record contains the evidence.[34]

1. Matters Not Apparent of Record

As a general rule, matters not properly included or shown in the record, notwithstanding they otherwise appear, will not be considered by the appellate court.

ance with this rule the appellate court will not consider stipulations or agreed statements of fact which are not properly embodied or shown in the record;[36] nor will it consider statements and admissions of counsel which form no part of the record, and relate to matters not otherwise appearing therein,[37] and this is so whether the admissions or statements appear, or are made, in briefs,[38] or whether they appear in argument[39] or in informal colloquy between the court and counsel,[40] unless they are matters of which the court might properly take judicial notice.[41]

Evidence dehors the record, whether by affidavit[42] or otherwise,[43] ordinarily will not be considered by the appellate court. The appellate court, however, may avail itself of authentic evidence outside the record of matters occurring since the judgment or decree appealed from, where such course is necessary to prevent a miscarriage of justice, or a useless circuity of proceedings,[44] or to preserve a jurisdiction lawfully acquired,[45] or to protect itself from imposition or further prosecution of litigation where the controversy between the parties has been settled, or for other reasons has ceased to exist.[46] The appellate court may consider data not contained in the record with respect to the administrative construction of a statute.[47]

Opinion of trial court. The opinion of the lower court, or matters which appear only therein, will not as a rule be considered by the appellate court to ascertain facts which are required to be shown by the record,[48] or to control or modify the findings of

Assignments of error complaining of findings of facts and of law can-

fact on which the judgment is based.[49] However, the lower court's opinion, may be considered for the limited purpose of enabling the appellate court better to understand and interpret the decision of the lower court, by having before it the grounds or basis for such decision, and the process of reasoning by which it was reached.[50]

§ 296. Assignment of Errors; Briefs; Docketing; Dismissal or Withdrawal; Matters Preliminary to Hearing

a. Assignment of errors or statement of points
b. Briefs
c. Dismissal, withdrawal, or abandonment

a. Assignment of Errors or Statement of Points

(1) In general
(2) Form, scope, and effect

(1) In General

At least where an appeal to the circuit court of appeals is based on a part of the record only, it is necessary that appellant file an assignment of errors or statement of points, and errors not assigned will not be considered except in the case of plain or fundamental errors apparent on the face of the record. On failure to file an assignment or statement of points as required, the court may dismiss the appeal or make such other disposition of the case as it sees fit.

Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 75 (d), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, where an appeal to the circuit court of appeals is based on a part of the record only, it is necessary that appellant shall prepare and serve a concise statement of the points on which he intends to rely on the appeal.[51] According to some decisions, the effect of this rule is to abolish the necessity of filing assignments of errors, except under the conditions specified by the rule.[52] It has been held, on the other hand, that it is still the policy of the circuit courts of appeals to require a reasonably definite statement of points or errors to be relied on, regardless of the quantum of the appeal record,[53] in accordance with the rule which generally prevailed prior to the promulgation of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, to the effect that errors not properly assigned would not be considered on appeal[54] except in the case of not be predicated on oral opinion stating court's reasons, where no findings either of fact or law are made.—Farmers' Life Ins. Co. of Denver, Colo., v. Barker, C.C.A.Tex., 2 F.2d 468.

Court's statement in denying motion for new trial not included in charge to jury will not be considered on appeal from judgment rendered on verdict.—Pullman Co. v. Culbreth, C.C.A.Ala., 2 F.2d 540, 42 A.L.R. 164, affirming, D.C., Culbreth v. Pullman Co., 293 F. 402.

Opinion of lower court as part of record see supra subdivision b of this section.

49. U.S.—American Ins. Co. v. Scheufler, C.C.A.Mo., 129 F.2d 143, affirming, D.C., American Ins. Co. v. Lucas, 38 F.Supp. 896, motion denied 38 F.Supp. 926, appeals dismissed 62 S.Ct. 107, 314 U.S. 575, 86 L.Ed. 466—Welch v. Hassett, C.C.A.Mass., 90 F.2d 833, reversing, D.C., 15 F.Supp. 692, certiorari granted Hassett v. Welch, 58 S.Ct. 56, 302 U.S. 674, 82 L.Ed. 521, affirmed 58 S.Ct. 559, 303 U.S. 303, 82 L.Ed. 858—Isaacs v. De Hon, C.C.A.Alaska, 11 F.2d 943.

Not finding or conclusion

Trial court's opinion or memorandum of opinion cannot on appeal be treated as finding of fact or conclusion of law.—Martin v. Drexel Ice Cream Co., C.C.A.Ill., 80 F.2d 768.

50. U.S.—Bankers Trust Co. v. Henwood, C.C.A.Mo., 88 F.2d 163, affirming, D.C., In re St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., 17 F.Supp. 68—Rademaker v. E. D. Flynn Export Co., C.C.A.Ala., 17 F.2d 15—Hall v. Acceptance of findings in opinion

Appellate court may determine whether findings and conclusions set forth in opinion should be accepted in lieu of separate findings required by rule or whether case will be returned to trial court for appropriate findings.—National Reserve Ins. Co. of Illinois v. Scudder, C.C.A.Cal., 71 F.2d 884.

51. U.S.—Kuper v. Betzer, C.C.A.S.D., 127 F.2d 84—Mutual Benefit Health & Accident Ass'n v. Snyder, C.C.A.Mich., 109 F.2d 469.

"The purpose of [Fed. Rules of Civ. Proc.] rule 75(d) is to insure that the matter brought up in the record on appeal is adequate to protect the interests of the appellee. If the appeal record contains less than a complete transcript of all the proceedings, including the evidence in the trial court, it is important to the appellee that he be informed of the points to be relied upon in order to determine whether or not the matter designated for inclusion is sufficient to enable him to answer the contentions of appellant."—Keeley v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, C.C.A.Ill., 113 F.2d 633, 636.

Requirement is a matter of substance, and not a mere matter of form which can be waived or dispensed with by agreement or conduct of the parties or their counsel.—U. S. v. Dieckmann, C.C.A.Ind., 101 F.2d 421.

Equity cases

(1) Rule requiring filing of assignment of errors applies to appeals in equity as well as to appeals in actions at law.—Wade v. Blieden, C.C.A. Ark., 86 F.2d 75.

(2) However, it was held that, where appeal in equity suit brings case up de novo, assignment of errors is unnecessary.—Aro Equipment Corporation v. Herring-Wissler Co., C. Statute superseding rule of court

Rule of court relative to assignment of errors was inapplicable, where appeal was taken after statute, 28 U.S.C.A. § 861b note, providing that no petition for appeal should be required, was in force.—Chavez v. U. S., C.C.A.N.M., 29 F.2d 701.

56. U.S.—Prudential Ins. Co. of

On failure to serve and file a statement of the points to be relied on on appeal as required, the circuit court of appeals may take such action as it deems appropriate, including dismissal of the appeal.[57] Ordinarily, however, a failure in this respect is not a jurisdictional defect in the appeal proceedings which necessitates a dismissal of the appeal,[58] and such action will not be taken in the absence of any claim of injury resulting from the failure to file the required statement.[59]

In accordance with the foregoing rules as to the necessity, at least under some circumstances, of an assignment of errors or statement of points on appeal, the circuit courts of appeals will not as a rule, except in the case of plain and fundamental errors apparent on the face of the record, consider errors which have not been properly assigned with respect to jurisdiction,[60] pleadings,[61] process,[62] evidence and rulings thereon,[63] instructions,[64] verdict and

Jurisdiction

(1) As a general rule, a question of jurisdiction may be raised on appeal although no error has been assigned with respect thereto.—Flowers v. U. S., C.C.A.Neb., 86 F.2d 79—Miller v. First Service Corporation, C.C.A.N.D., 84 F.2d 680, 109 A.L.R. 1179—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Commissioners of Road Improvement Dist. No. 2 of Lafayette County, Ark., C.C.A.Ark., 265 F. 524, certiorari granted Commissioners of Road Improvement Dist. No. 2 v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., 41 S.Ct. 15, 254 U.S. 626, 65 L.Ed. 445, affirmed Commissioners of Road Imp. Dist. No. 2 of Lafayette County, Ark., v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., 42 S.Ct. 250, 257 U.S. 547, 66 L.Ed. 364—Toledo Newspaper Co. v. U. S., 237 F. 986, 150 C.C.A. 636, affirming, D.C., U. S. v. Toledo Newspaper Co., 220 F. 458, affirmed Toledo Newspaper Co. v. U. S., 38 S.Ct. 560, 247 U.S. 402, 62 L.Ed. 1186—3 C.J. p 1343 notes 87, 88.

(2) It has been held, however, that mere errors in the method of exercising acknowledged jurisdiction are not fundamental within the text rule.—Morrison v. Burnette, Ind.T., 154 F. 617, 83 C.C.A. 391, appeal dismissed 29 S.Ct. 394, 212 U.S. 291, 53 L.Ed. 517—Rogers v. Penobscot Min. Co., S.D., 154 F. 606, 83 C.C.A. 380.

Condition precedent

However, under the rules prevailing in at least one circuit, it is a condition precedent to the consideration of an appeal by the circuit court of appeals that the prescribed statement of points be served and filed.—Keeley v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, C.C.A.Ill., 113 F.2d 633.

Irregularity cured

Motion to dismiss appeal on ground that appellant did not serve a statement of the points on which it would rely on appeal, while designating less than the complete record for inclusion in the transcript, would be denied, where appellees designated for inclusion all parts of the record not designated by appellant, since any irregularity in designation of the record by appellant was cured.—Grand Lodge Improved, B. findings,[65] judgment, order, or decree,[66] and rulings on motions for new trial, and proceedings after judgment.[67]

Assignments of cross errors. In the absence of statute or rule of court giving such right, it is generally held that an appellee cannot make a cross assignment of errors unless he himself appeals.[68]

(2) Form, Scope, and Effect

Where assignments of errors or statements of points relied on for appeal are required, they must substantially comply as to form, contents, filing, and service with statutes or rules of courts; and, while noncompliance may be overlooked by the court, it may result in the refusing of the court to consider errors, dismissing the appeal, or affirming the judgment below.

Where assignments of error or statements of points relied on for appeal are required, see supra subdivision a (1) of this section, they must substantially comply as to form and contents, and in other particulars, with the applicable provisions of statutes and rules of court.[69] An assignment must

However, where a party moves for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for new trial in the alternative, if the trial judge grants judgment notwithstanding the verdict and denies motion for new trial, the movant may cross assign error in the opposing party's appeal to the circuit court of appeals to rulings of law at the trial.—Montgomery Ward & Co. v. A motion for a new trial cannot be used as a substitute for an assignment of errors if there is no express provision to that effect.—Booth v. Gilbert, C.C.A.Mo., 79 F.2d 790.

Reference to extrinsic matter
Generally an assignment of errors must be so complete in itself that no reference to extrinsic matter is necessary to determine what is intended to be presented thereby.—American Surety Co. of New York v. Fischer Warehouse Co., C.C.A.Or., 88 F.2d 536—Delaware & H. R. Corporation v. Cottrell, C.C.A.Pa., 69 F.2d 195, certiorari denied 54 S.Ct. 719, 292 U.S. 638, 78 L.Ed. 1490—McClellan v. Pyeatt, Ind.T., 50 F. 686, 1 C.C.A. 613—3 C.J. p 1398 note 80.

Mere clerical errors and immaterial defects or irregularities will be disregarded.—McBride v. Neal, Ill., 214 F. 966, 131 C.C.A. 262—Church Cooperage Co. v. Pinkney, N.Y., 170 F. 266, 95 C.C.A. 462, reversing, D.C., 163 F. 653.

Joint and several assignments
(1) A joint assignment of error must be good as to all who join therein, or it will not be available as to any of them.—Wimberly v. Cowan Inv. Corporation, C.C.A.Ala., 80 F.2d 452, certiorari denied 56 S.Ct. 674, 298 U.S. 654, 80 L.Ed. 1381—Dolbear v. Gulf Production Co., C.C.A.Tex., 268 F. 737, certiorari denied Shannon v. Gulf Production Co., 41 S.Ct. 375, 255 U.S. 569, 65 L.Ed. 790.

(2) Where an appellant wishes to urge an identical question or error with respect to several different parties, one assignment is sufficient as to all.—Andrews v. National Foundry & Pipe Works, Wis., 76 F. 166, 22 C.C.A. 110, 36 L.R.A. 139, rehearing denied 77 F. 774, 23 C.C.A. 454, 36 L.R.A. 153, certiorari denied 17 S.Ct. 996, 166 U.S. 721, 41 L.Ed. 1188.

Filing of excessive and unnecessary number of assignments is improper, and court may in such case consider only such questions as seem to it to be material to the judgment.—Nev-Cal Electric Securities Co. v. Imperial Irr. Dist., C.C.A.Cal., 85 F.2d 886, certiorari denied 57 S.Ct. 493, 300 U.S. 662, 81 L.Ed. 871—Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation v. be as to some reviewable judicial action occurring during the trial,[70] and it must have been preserved for review by timely and proper objections and exceptions.[71] The assignment or statement of points must set forth definitely and specifically the particular error or errors relied on,[72] and as a general rule an assignment defective in this respect will not be considered by the appellate court,[73] unless the error complained of is a plain or fundamental error apparent on the record, so that it may be considered on that ground.[74] Each error relied on must be separately and distinctly specified, no one assignment shall embrace more than one specification of error, and on a failure to comply with this requirement the court will either refuse to consider the assignment at all or will overrule it if any one of the assignments of error cannot be sustained.[75]

The foregoing rules as to the requisite specification of errors to warrant review thereof by the circuit court of appeals have been applied with respect

Rule unchanged

Rule of circuit court of appeals as to statement of points necessitates same separation and particularity of statement as did former assignment of errors.—New York Casualty Co. v. Young Men's Christian Ass'n, C.C. A.Iowa, 119 F.2d 387, certiorari denied Young Men's Christian Ass'n v. New York Casualty Co., 62 S.Ct. 91, 314 U.S. 648, 86 L.Ed. 519.

Objections and exceptions

The assignment of errors must set out specifically and fully the ruling or action of the court complained of and set out or show the necessary objections or exceptions thereto made in the lower court.—Lewis v. Standard Oil Co. of California, C.C.A.Cal., 88 F.2d 512—McCoy v. Universal Carloading & Distributing Co., C.C.A. Ohio, 82 F.2d 342—U. S. v. Alcorn, C.C.A.Or., 80 F.2d 487—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Elmira Coal Co., C.C. A.Mo., 69 F.2d 616.

Reference to record

It is sometimes required by rule of court that the assignment shall refer to the record by page or otherwise, so as to indicate where the alleged error may be found.—Miller-Crenshaw Co. v. Colorado Mill & Elevator Co., C.C.A.Ark., 84 F.2d 930, affirmed 87 F.2d 457—U. S. v. Nickle, C.C.A.Mo., 70 F.2d 873—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Elmira Coal Co., C.C. A.Mo., 69 F.2d 616—Anderson v. U. Admission or rejection of evidence

(1) The particular evidence or offer, the admission or exclusion of which is claimed to be erroneous, must be pointed out or identified.—Collins v. Finley, C.C.A.Ariz., 94 F. 2d 935, certiorari denied Collins, by Hughes v. Finley, 59 S.Ct. 76, 305 U. S. 618, 83 L.Ed. 394—Lewis v. Standard Oil Co. of California, C.C.A.Cal., 88 F.2d 512.

(2) The assignment should quote the full evidence admitted or rejected and the objections, exceptions, and rulings thereon.—National Surety Corporation v. (3) If the error assigned is refusal of the court to permit a witness to answer a question, the assignment must show what answer the witness was expected to make.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Lindholm, C.C.A.Cal., 66 F.2d 56, 89 A.L.R. 279—3 C.J. p 1371 note 35.

(4) However, where an objection to a question was sustained, so that the witness made no answer, and where there was no offer of evidence made by the excepting party and rejected by the trial court, statements in assignments of error as to what it was expected the witness would have answered are unnecessary.—Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Straus, C.C.A.N.Y., 280 F. 717.

(5) Different errors with regard to the admission or exclusion of evidence should not be joined in one assignment.—Century Indemnity Co. v. Nelson, C.C.A.Cal., 90 F.2d 644, certiorari granted 58 S.Ct. 55, 302 U.S. 674, 82 L.Ed. 520, reversed on other grounds 58 S.Ct. 531, 303 U.S. 213, 82 L.Ed. 755, mandate conformed to, C.C.A., 96 F.2d 679, rehearing denied 98 F.2d 903—3 C.J. p 1372 note 40.

Weight and sufficiency

(1) An assignment of error in general terms that the evidence was insufficient or that the judgment, decision, or finding was not supported by, or was contrary to, the evidence ordinarily is regarded as presenting no question for review.—Inland Power & Light Co. v. Grieger, C.C.A. Wash., 91 F.2d 811—Humphreys Gold Corporation v. Lewis, C.C.A.Mont., 90 F.2d 896—Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. motions for new trial.[84]

Filing, annexing to record, and service. Under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 75 (d), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, appellant's statement of points for appeal is to be filed and served with his designation of the portions of the record to be brought up on appeal.[85]

Defects, objections, and amendment. An assignment of error, or statement of points for appeal, which is not in compliance with the applicable rules of court or statutes will, in general, be disregarded;[86] and such noncompliance may result in a dismissal of the appellate proceeding,[87] or an affirmance of the judgment.[88] However, failure to comply fully with the rules or statutes is not necessarily fatal to a consideration of the errors raised by the defective assignment,[89] at least where no prejudice results from the defect.[90] Leave to file amended or additional assignments of error will be granted only for good cause.[91]

Scope of assignment

Rule that assigning error to one ruling or decision raises no question as to the correctness of another applies with respect to the assignments of error to judgments.—Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Twohy Bros. Co., C.C.A.Or., 95 F.2d 220, certiorari denied 58 S.Ct. 1049, 304 U.S. 575, 82 L.Ed. 1539—Century Indemnity Co. v. Nelson, C.C.A.Cal., 90 F.2d 644, certiorari granted 58 S.Ct. 55, 302 U.S. 674, 82 L.Ed. 520, and reversed on other grounds 58 S.Ct. 531, 302 U.S. 213, 82 L.Ed. 755, conformed to, C.C.A., 96 F.2d 679, rehearing denied 98 F.2d 903—3 C.J. p 1387 note 64.

84. U.S.—Niagara Fire Ins. Co. of New York, N. Y., v. Raleigh Hardware Co., C.C.A.W.Va., 62 F.2d 705—O'Brien v. General Accident, Fire & Life Assur. Corporation, Limited, of Perth, Scotland, C.C.A.Neb., 42 F.2d 48—Eteenpain Co-op. Soc. v. Lillback, C.C.A.Mass., 18 F.2d 912. 3 C.J. p 1391 note 14.

85. U.S.—Fiske v. Wallace, C.C.A. Mo., 115 F.2d 1003, certiorari denied Wallace v. Fiske, 62 S.Ct. 123, two cases, 314 U.S. 663, 86 L.Ed. 531, rehearing denied 62 S.Ct. 174, two cases, 314 U.S. 710, 86 L.Ed. 566.

Under prior practice

(1) Assignment of errors had to be filed in the manner and within the time prescribed by statute and court rules.—Joplin Ice Co. v. U. S., C.C.A. Mo., 87 F.2d 174—U. S. v. Kieling, C.C.A.Or., 68 F.2d 163—Board of Com'rs of Osage County v. U. S., C.C.A.Okl., 64 F.2d 775—Raftery ex rel. Huie Fong v. Bligh, C.C.A.Mass., 55 F.2d 189—U. S. v. b. Briefs

It is generally required that parties to an appeal to the circuit court of appeals file briefs complying with court rules as to their form and contents, and on noncompliance with this requirement the court may dismiss the appeal or make such other disposition of the case as it deems fit.

It is generally required that parties to an appeal to the circuit court of appeals file briefs presenting their contentions,[92] and on failure to comply with this requirement the disposition of the case is ordinarily within the discretion of the court,[93] and it may in some circumstances dismiss the appeal.[94] The form and substance of briefs must conform to that prescribed by the court rules.[95] A brief should contain a brief, clear, and concise statement of the material facts, or an abstract of the case, presenting succinctly the questions involved,[96] and it should specifically and exactly point out the particular error or errors relied on for reversal.[97] The points

Particular matters

(1) To obtain consideration of an alleged error in the admission or rejection of evidence it is essential, according as the rules of the court may provide, to refer in the brief to the pages of the record where found, or to set forth in the brief itself, the evidence, objections, and rulings thereon.—Butler v. U. S., C.C.A.Ark., 108 F.2d 27—Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Niemann, C.C.A.Mo., 47 F.2d 1056—Welland v. Pioneer Irr. Co., Colo., 238 F. 519, 151 C.C.A. 455, affirmed 42 S.Ct. 568, 259 U.S. 498, 66 L.Ed. 1027—3 C.J. p. 1415 notes 72, 73, p 1416 note 76.

(2) Instructions with respect to which error was alleged should be set out in the brief.—National Cash Register Co. v. Leland, Mass., 94 F. 502, 37 C.C.A. 372, certiorari denied 20 S.Ct. 1021, 175 U.S. 724, 44 L.Ed. 337.

(3) Verdict or findings.—Diamond Alkali Co. v. Heiner, C.C.A.Pa., 60 F. 2d 505, modifying, D.C., 39 F.2d 645, and certiorari granted Heiner v. Diamond Alkali Co., 53 S.Ct. 221, 287 U. S. 593, 77 L.Ed. 517, reversed on other grounds 53 S.Ct. 413, 298 U.S. 502, 77 L.Ed. 921—Reid v. Baker, C.C.A. Or., 17 F.2d 770.

Record

(1) Under some court rules, it is required that the brief set out a concise statement of as much of the record as will enable the court to pass on all errors assigned so that no examination of the record itself need be made.—Pickett v. Aglinsky, C.C. A.W.Va., 110 F.2d 628.

(2) Under other rules, reference must be made to the record by page in verification of the statement of the case.—Wallace v. Hudson-Duncan & Co., C.C.A.Or., 98 F.2d 985, reversing, D.C., Hudson-Duncan & Co. v. Wallace, 21 F.Supp. 295.

(3) Reference to pages of the record may also be required to point out alleged errors complained of.—Fienup v. Kleinman, C.C.A.S.D., 5 F.2d 137—Varner v. Clark, C.C.A.Okl., 283 F. 17—Broatch v. Boysen, Wyo., 236 F. 516, 149 C.C.A. 568—Colorado Yule Marble Co. v. Collins, Neb., 230 F. 78, 144 C.C.A. 376—3 C.J. p 1409 note 37, p 1410 note 38, p 1415 note 72.

Improper matter will not be considered

U.S.—Malleable Iron Range Co. v. Lee, C.C.A.Wis., 263 F. 896, modifying, D.C., Lee v. Malleable Iron Range Co., 247 F. 795, and certiorari denied Malleable Iron Range Co. v. Lee, 40 S.Ct. 342, 251 U.S. 562, 64 L.Ed. 415.

97. U.S.—Simons v. Davidson Brick Co., C.C.A.Cal., 106 F.2d 518—Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. O'Donnell, C.C.A., 90 F.2d 907, certiorari granted Helvering v. O'Donnell, 58 S.Ct. 121, 302 U.S. 676, 82 L.Ed. 522, and reversed on other grounds 58 S.Ct. 619, 302 U.S. 370, 82 L.Ed. 903, rehearing denied 58 S.Ct. 762, 303 U.S. 669, 82 L.Ed. 1125—Ford Motor Co. v. Brady, C. C.A.Mo., 73 F.2d 248—Harrow-Taylor Butter Co. v. Crooks, C.C.A.Mo., 41 F.2d 627—Hard & Rand v. Biston Coffee Co., C.C.A.Mo., 41 F.2d 625—Ætna Indemnity Co. v. J. R. Crowe Coal & Mining Co., Mo., 154 F. 545, 83 C.C.A. 431, certiorari denied 28 S.Ct. 256, 207 U.S. 589, 52 L.Ed. 354.
3 C.J. p. 1412 note 54, p 1414 note 64, p 1415 note 71.

Requisites of specification

(1) It is required under some rules that each specification of error in the brief shall state the particular ruling claimed to be erroneous and the assignment or assignments of error on which the specification is based.—Barnett v. U. S., C.C.A.Cal., 82 F.2d 765, certiorari denied 57 S.Ct. 9, 299 U.S. 546, 81 L.Ed. 402, rehearing denied 57 S.Ct. 113, 299 U.S. 620, 81 L. Ed. 457.

(2) Errors should be distinctly and separately alleged.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co., C.C.A.Cal., 86 F.2d 585—Harrow-Taylor Butter Co. v. Crooks, C.C.A.Mo., 41 F.2d 627.

Effect of noncompliance

(1) Errors not included in the brief as points relied on will be considered to have been abandoned and will not be noticed.—Mason v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irr. Dist., C. C.A.Cal., 126 F.2d 921, certiorari denied 62 S.Ct. 1293, 316 U.S. 697, 86 L.Ed. 1767—Butler v. U. S., C.C.A. Ark., 108 F.2d 27—U. S. v. John II Estate, C.C.A. Hawaii, 91 F.2d 93, certiorari denied John II Estate v. U. S., 58 S.Ct. 264, 302 U.S. 746, 82 L.Ed. 577—U. S. v. Shingle, C.C.A.Hawaii, 91 F.2d 85, certiorari denied Shingle v. U. S., 58 S.Ct. 264, 302 U.S. 746, 82 L.Ed. 577—Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co., C.C.A.Cal., 86 F.2d 585—Hultman v. Tevis, C.C.A.Cal., 82 F.2d 940—Berry v. Earling, C.C.A. Alaska, 82 F.2d 317—Gelberg v. Richardson, C.C.A.Cal., 82 F.2d 314—Gripton v. Richardson, C.C.A.Cal., 82 F.2d 313—Ford Motor Co. v. Brady, C.C.A. Mo., 73 F.2d 248—Wabash Ry. Co. v. Lindley, C.C.A.Neb., 29 F.2d 829—City of Goldfield, Colo., v. Roger, Colo., 249 F. 39, 161 C.C.A. 99—3 C.J. p 1410 note 42.

(2) In absence of specification of errors, the court may affirm the or propositions of law raised in the brief should be applied to the facts and circumstances of the particular case,[98] and should be supported by argument[99] and proper citation of authorities.[1] Disrespectful or abusive language should not be inserted in the brief.[2]

While failure to comply with rules of court as to the form and contents of briefs may result in the affirmance of the judgment below,[3] dismissal of the appeal,[4] or striking of the brief,[5] technical defects will sometimes be overlooked in the absence of prejudice resulting therefrom,[6] at least where amendment by permission has cured the defects.[7]

Compliance must usually be had with rules as to the printing or typewriting,[8] and service,[9] of briefs; and a failure to file a brief within the time limited therefor may result in the court disregarding the brief,[10] and dismissing the appeal,[11] although it is within the discretion of the court to overlook the default where justified by the facts and circumstances.[12] judgment or dismiss the appeal.—Mathewson v. First Trust Co. of St. Joseph, C.C.A.Mo., 100 F.2d 121, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 789, 306 U.S. 663, 83 L.Ed. 1060—Huffman v. Baldwin, C.C.A.Ark., 82 F.2d 5, certiorari denied Baldwin v. Huffman, 57 S.Ct. 12, 299 U.S. 550, 81 L.Ed. 405—Harrow-Taylor Butter Co. v. Crooks, C.C.A.Mo., 41 F.2d 627—Hard & Rand v. Biston Coffee Co., C.C.A.Mo., 41 F. 2d 625—3 C.J. p 1414 note 66, p 1415 note 67.

(3) However, the court may, if it sees fit, determine a case on the merits, even though there is no proper specification of errors.—McCullough v. Satterthwait, C.C.A.Okl., 11 F.2d 111—Klink v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., Colo., 219 F. 457, 135 C.C. A. 169—Western Assur. Co. v. Polk, Neb., 104 F. 649, 44 C.C.A. 104.

(4) So an error which involves a question of federal jurisdiction will be noticed.—Huffman v. Baldwin, C. C.A.Ark., 82 F.2d 5, certiorari denied Baldwin v. Huffman, 57 S.Ct. 12, 299 U.S. 550, 81 L.Ed. 405.

(5) But the court need not search the record for errors on which to reverse the judgment.—Coco-Cola Co. v. Moore, Ark., 256 F. 640, 168 C.C.A. 34—3 C.J. p 1413 note 56.

(6) Although errors should have been more specifically alleged, where the court is able to discover the errors relied on, and neither respondent nor the court has been misled, they will be considered.—Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co. v. John R. Thompson Co., C.C.A.Mo., 88 F.2d 825, certiorari denied 57 S.Ct. 941, 301 U.S. 707, 81 L.Ed. 1361.

98. U.S.—Ralston Purina Co. v. Novak, C.C.A.Neb., 111 F.2d 631.

A general or abstract statement of law or fact without specific application to some alleged error cannot be relied on as ground for reversal.—Butler v. U. S., C.C.A.Ark., 108 F. 2d 27—Harrow-Taylor Butter Co. v. Crooks, C.C.A.Mo., 41 F.2d 627.

99. U.S.—Wilder v. Century Carpet Co., C.C.A.Cal., 92 F.2d 175.

Excessive argument

Rules prohibiting argument in excess of a specified number of pages should not be violated by incorporating what is in fact argument under the heading "Statement of the Case."—Clark Blade & Razor Co. v. Gillette Safety Razor Co., C.C.A.N.J., 82 F. 2d 707.

c. Dismissal, Withdrawal, or Abandonment

Generally only the circuit court of appeals may dismiss an appeal to it, on proper and timely motion of a party, or in some instances on its own motion, and it may do so only in a clear case on some legal and substantial ground. On dismissal of an appeal or its abandonment, the cause stands as though no appeal had been taken, and the dismissal renders the decree or order below final, but the appellate court may in its discretion vacate its order of dismissal and reinstate the appeal.

After the jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals over an appeal has attached, it may in a proper case dismiss the appeal,[15] but the trial court from which the appeal originated is without power to do so.[16] An appeal will be dismissed where all parties whose rights are affected so agree,[17] and appellant will, as a rule, be permitted to withdraw or to dismiss his appeal,[18] although not as to his coappellants.[19]

A motion to dismiss an appeal must be made on some legal ground recognized by statute or rules of court, or otherwise present substantial defects of such a nature as to preclude a fair determination of the cause on appeal, or else the motion will be denied.[20] While an omission or defect not going to the substance of an appeal is no ground for its dismissal,[21] generally an appeal may be dismissed where no actual controversy exists between the parties at the time of the hearing, and only a moot question exists for determination,[22] where the ap-limited by court rule did not require dismissal of appeal where brief was filed before any motion was made to dismiss the appeal.—American Ins. Co. v. Scheufler, C.C.A. Mo., 129 F.2d 143, affirming, D.C., American Ins. Co. v. Lucas, 38 F. Supp. 896, motion denied 38 F.Supp. 926, appeals dismissed 62 S.Ct. 107, 314 U.S. 575, 86 L.Ed. 466.

Filing nunc pro tunc
An appeal will not be dismissed for failure to file copies of the brief as required but such filing will be permitted nunc pro tunc.—Delaware & H. Co. v. Stankus, C.C.A.Pa., 63 F. 2d 887.

No request is necessary to enable appellant to move to dismiss.—Baltimore S. S. Co. v. Phillips, C.C.A.N.Y., 9 F.2d 902, certiorari granted 46 S. Ct. 348, 270 U.S. 638, 70 L.Ed. 774, and reversed on other grounds 47 S. Ct. 600, 274 U.S. 316, 71 L.Ed. 1069.

Leave of court
Appellant cannot dismiss the appeal as a matter of right but only on leave of court.—Greenville Banking & Trust Co. v. Selcow, C.C.A.N.J., 25 F.2d 78.

Costs
An appellant dismissing or withdrawing his appeal should be charged with the costs.—Tannage Patent Co. v. Donallan, C.C.Mass., 75 F. 287, appeal dismissed 79 F. 385, 24 C.C.A. 647.

Jurisdiction to consider appeal
Appeals should be dismissed only when the appellate court has no jurisdiction to review any aspect of the action taken below, and when the order below is reëxamined, even to the limited extent of determining whether discretion of district court has been abused, appellate court exercises its appellate jurisdiction, and affirmance or reversal is required.—Federal Land Bank of Springfield v. Hansen, C.C.A.N.Y., 113 F.2d 82.

Error not shown
Ordinarily an appeal will not be dismissed on the ground that error is not shown, but the circuit court of appeals will consider the appeal on the merits.—Felker v. Southern Trust Co., C.C.A.Ark., 264 F. 798, certiorari denied 41 S.Ct. 8, 254 U.S. 633, 65 L.Ed. 449.

Allowance of appeal not shown
Circuit court of appeals cannot dismiss appeal or affirm judgment, where allowance of appeal is not shown, but can only strike cause from docket.—National Veneer Co. v. Langley, C.C.A.N.C., 29 F.2d 403.

21. U.S.—E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Smith, Va., 249 F. 403, 161 C.C.A. 377.

Alleged errors in the proceedings below generally afford no ground for dismissal of the appeal, but if properly presented will be considered by the appellate court at the hearing on the merits.—Operators' Oil Co. v. Barbre, C.C.A.Okl., 64 F.2d 857—Bradley v. Eccles, N.Y., 126 F. 945, 61 C.C.A. 669, affirming, C.C., 122 F. 867, and reversing 122 F. 871.

(3) Where appellant accepts the benefits of the judgment, order, or decree.—Selected Products Corporation v. Humphreys, C.C.A.Ill., 86 F.2d 821.

(4) Where the judgment or decree appealed from has been satisfied or complied with by appellant.—Selected Products Corporation v. Humphreys, supra—In re Smith, C.C.A. Cal., 71 F.2d 378—National-Ben Franklin Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa., v. Haughton, C.C.A.Tex., 36 F. 2d 225.

Apparently contra—The Barge No. 25, C.C.A.Cal., 14 F.2d 107.

(5) However, payment by someone other than defendant will not necessitate dismissal of the appeal.—Cramer v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., C.C.A.Iowa, 91 F.2d 141, affirming, D.C., Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Lafferty, 16 F.Supp. 740.

Costs

An appeal in a case which has become moot will not be retained merely for the purpose of determining the question of costs.—Gelpi v. Tugwell, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 123 F.2d 377—Johnson-Kennedy Radio Corporation v. Chicago Bears Football Club, C.C. A.Ill., 97 F.2d 223.

Appeal not dismissed

(1) Where the controversy has not ceased to exist.—Oklahoma City v. Sanders, C.C.A.Okl., 94 F.2d 323, 115 A.L.R. 363, affirming, D.C., Sanders v. Oklahoma City, 19 F.Supp. 50—Berdie v. Nonappealable judgment

Appeal may be dismissed where an appeal is taken from a nonappealable judgment, order, or decree, or where a final judgment is lacking.—Hunter v. Federal Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Ark., 103 F.2d 192—Lieberman v. Bancroft, C.C.A.Pa., 69 F.2d 202.

Amount in controversy

Where plaintiff saved question of whether items aggregating one thousand seven hundred dollars were properly stricken from bill by district court, fact that residue of claim amounted to only one thousand nine hundred dollars does not require dismissal by circuit court on ground that requisite amount is not in controversy.—Crawford County Trust & Savings Bank v. Crawford County, Iowa, C.C.A.Iowa, 63 F.2d 342.

Former statute construed

(1) Under Jud.Code § 238a which formerly prevailed, the circuit court of appeals could not dismiss an appeal improperly before it which should have been taken directly to the supreme court of the United States, but was required to transfer it to the supreme court.—W. T. Waggoner Estate v. Wichita County, Tex., 47 S.Ct. 271, 273 U.S. 113, 71 L. Ed. 566, affirming, C.C.A., 3 F.2d 962, affirming, D.C., Waggoner v. Wichita County, 298 F. 818—R. H. Hassler, Inc., v. Shaw, C.C.A.S.C., 3 F.2d 605—Reading Steel Casting Co. v. U. S., C. C.A.Pa., 293 F. 386, transferred, see 45 S.Ct. 469, 268 U.S. 186, 69 L.Ed. 907—McLean Oil Co. v. Ashworth Heirs, C.C.A.Tex., 289 F. 73—Bianchi v. Morales, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 288 F. 194.

(2) This statute was held inapplicable to any case in which the appeal to the circuit court of appeals was taken after the period for appeals to the supreme court had expired.—U. S. & Cuban Allied Works Engineering Corporation v. Lloyds, N.Y., 44 S.Ct. 614, 265 U.S. 454, 68 L. Ed. 1103—McMillan Contracting Co. v. Abernathy, Mo., 44 S.Ct. 200, 263 U.S. 438, 68 L.Ed. 378, remanding appeals, C.C.A., 284 F. 354, appeal dismissed 2 F.2d 1018.

where there is an unexcused failure to prosecute the appeal within the time prescribed by statute or rule of court,[25] or where it appears that appellant has lost or disposed of his interest.[26] Also dismissal may be warranted by failure to perfect the appeal in the required manner,[27] unless the error in the proceedings for review is nonprejudicial;[28] and if, pending an appeal, an event occurs which makes a determination of it unnecessary or renders it clearly impossible for the appellate court to grant effectual relief, the appeal will be dismissed.[29]

Waiver or cure of defects. Treating an appeal as valid[30] and proceeding without preliminary objection to defects and irregularities[31] may under some circumstances be deemed a waiver of the right to have the appeal dismissed for such defects and irregularities. The circuit court of appeals may refuse to dismiss an appeal for defects and irregularities in the proceedings for review when such defects have been subsequently cured.[32]

Motion to dismiss. Generally a motion to dismiss is necessary to obtain a dismissal of an appeal to the circuit court of appeals,[33] but the court may or should dismiss an appeal of its own motion for want

Time of docketing appeal

The appellate court will not dismiss for a failure to docket the appeal in time, if, before the motion is made, the cause is actually placed on the docket.—American Gas Mach. Co. v. Willcuts, C.C.A.Minn., 87 F.2d 924—4 C.J. p 588 note 87.

Alternative motion

of jurisdiction,[34] want of right to appeal generally,[35] defect or omission of essential parties,[36] defects in the proceedings for review,[37] or want of an actual controversy.[38] Such a motion must be made within the proper time,[39] and on proper notice.[40]

Motions to dismiss are not looked on with favor,[41] and in a doubtful case the appeal will be maintained.[42] On such a motion the circuit court of appeals will not ordinarily consider or determine the merits of the appeal, or questions involving its merits;[43] and where, in passing on a motion to dismiss, the court would be required to examine the entire record, the motion will ordinarily not be considered in advance of a hearing on the merits, or will be denied.[44] Ordinarily a motion to dismiss an appeal will not lie where it is necessary to examine evidence in order to pass on the motion;[45] but evidence dehors the record may in some circumstances be received and considered for the purpose of disposing of such a motion.[46]

Order of dismissal and dismissal without prejudice. While appellant, in the absence of special equitable considerations, is not entitled to a dismissal without prejudice,[47] the court may order such a dismissal in a proper case.[48] An appeal may be dis-

Successive motions

(1) A second motion to dismiss an appeal, based on the same grounds as a former motion or on grounds existing at the time of such former motion, will, as a general rule, be denied.—Nashua & L. R. Corp. v. Boston & L. R. Corp., Mass., 51 F. 929, 2 C.C.A. 542.

(2) A motion to dismiss may be denied without prejudice to the moving party's right to renew the motion at a later stage of the proceedings.—Lynch v. Durfey, C.C.A.Cal., 108 F.2d 181.

(3) Where a motion to dismiss was denied as premature, and by inadvertence no leave was given to renew the motion, the circuit court of appeals may consider the questions raised by a second motion.—Bennell Realty Co. v. E. G. Shinner & Co., C.C.A.Wis., 87 F.2d 824, certiorari denied 58 S.Ct. 12, 302 U.S. 693, 82 L. Ed. 535.

However, it has been held that the fact that the appealing party's claim was not adjudicated below and that none of the other parties appealed does not preclude the court from considering the appeal on the merits in the absence of a motion to dismiss.—Hayes v. missed in part.[49]

Effect of dismissal. When an appeal is dismissed, whether on motion or otherwise, the whole case is out of court;[50] the cause stands in the trial court as though no appeal had ever been taken,[51] and the decree or order appealed from becomes final.[52]

Abandonment. The jurisdiction of the lower court is restored in case of abandonment of an appeal, and it may proceed in the cause as though no appeal had been taken.[53]

Vacating order and reinstatement. A motion to reinstate an appeal after dismissal thereof is addressed to the judicial discretion of the court,[54] and the court may grant such motion on good cause shown.[55]

a. In General

General principles of review are applied by the circuit court of appeals in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction.

The circuit court of appeals is, as to law cases, a court of error;[56] it does not retry a jury case, but reviews the record for reversible error by the trial judge in failing to conduct the trial within proper bounds,[57] its function being limited to a review of specific rulings of the lower court alleged to be erroneous.[58] The circuit court of appeals will not decide a matter which was for the court below to determine;[59] but where the facts are not in dispute, the former court is in the same position as the trial court to pass on the question of law involved.[60] It has been broadly stated that, on appeal to the circuit court of appeals, all issues presented by the pleadings and the evidence are before the court for adjudication.[61]

Failure of a district judge to follow the prior rulings of another judge who sat in the same case does not affect the power of the circuit court of appeals to review the final judgment.[62]

50. U.S.—Maxwell v. Williams, Ark. Super., 16 F.Cas.No.9,324a, Hempst. 172.

Remand

The circuit court of appeals may not thereafter remand the record with leave to the court below to allow a new trial.—Realty Acceptance Corporation v. Montgomery, Del., 52 S.Ct. 215, 284 U.S. 547, 76 L.Ed. 476, affirming, C.C.A., Montgomery v. Realty Acceptance Corporation, 51 F. 2d 642, certiorari granted Realty Acceptance Corporation v. Montgomery, 52 S.Ct. 25, 284 U.S. 604, 76 L.Ed. 518.

Abandonment not shown

Plaintiffs in federal court action did not, by filing counterclaim for same cause of action in subsequent suit in local territorial court, elect to abandon appeal from adverse judgment in federal court.—Franceschi v. De Tord, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 71 F.2d 95.

54. U.S.—Rector v. Alcorn, Miss., 204 F. 748, 123 C.C.A. 125.

Time of making motion

Due diligence in moving to reinstate the appeal is required, or the delay will be fatal.—Arcoil Mfg. Co. v. American Equitable Assur. Co. of New York, C.C.A.N.J., 87 F.2d 206—Greene v. Hulse, C.C.A., 33 F.2d 121.

Refusal of trial court to order an accounting under a supplemental bill presents nothing for consideration on appeal, where the trial court dismissed the supplemental bill.—Barton v. Rex-Oil Co., C.C.A.Pa., 29 F.2d 474.

Relief from judgment taken by mistake, etc.

The district court, and not the circuit court of appeals, is the place to make a record covering requirements of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 60(b), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, authorizing one to seek relief from judgment or order taken against him by mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect.—Perlman v. 322 West Seventy-Second Street Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 127 F.2d 716.

Review of orders out of time

Where district court refused to review previous orders and decrees out of time, appellant could not attack them in circuit court of appeals.—Bernards v. Johnson, Or., 62 S.Ct. 30, 314 U.S. 19, 86 L.Ed. 11, affirming, C.C.A., 103 F.2d 567, certiorari denied 60 S.Ct. 127, 308 U.S. 595, 84 L.Ed. 498, certiorari granted 60 S.Ct. 899, 310 U.S. 616, 84 L.Ed. 1391.

62. U.S.—Friederichsen v. Renard, Neb., 231 F. 882, 146 C.C.A. 78, re-

Review dependent on whether questions are of law or fact. As appears infra subdivision g of this section, the general rule is that a circuit court of appeals cannot review findings of fact; but it reviews questions of law, without being bound by the conclusions of the court below.[63] A finding designated by the lower court as one of fact will be treated on review as one of law, if substantially of the latter character.[64]

In addition to other questions or findings,[65] the following have been held on review to be questions or findings of fact: What is the law of a foreign country;[66] intention to transfer title;[67] existence of negligence;[68] whether the minds of the parties met;[69] mitigation of damages;[70] and excessiveness of verdict.[71]

A reviewable question of law is presented where the evidence is, or the facts are, undisputed or without substantial conflict,[72] and where the answer admits the crucial averments of the petition by styling them as immaterial and as not requiring an answer.[73] A question or conclusion of law is also presented by the construction of pleadings,[74] of a decree,[75] a statute,[76] or of a contract or other document or instrument;[77] and it is a question of law whether there is any substantial evidence to

80. Particular matters held to involve questions of law.

(1) Application of proper rule of damages for breach of contract, except "where the application of the true rule of damages depends upon circumstances and facts which throw light upon the understanding of the parties and the character of the agreement."—Milton v. H. C. Stone Lumber Co., C.C.A.Ill., 36 F.2d 589, 590, affirming, D.C., 36 F.2d 583.

(2) In action for value of attorney's services, difficulty of the legal problem with respect to which the services were rendered.—Kuhn v. Princess Lida of Thurn & Taxis, C.C. A.Pa., 119 F.2d 704.

(3) Materiality of insured's statements in application for accident insurance policy sued on.—Ocean Accident & Guaranty Corporation v. Rubin, C.C.A.Cal., 73 F.2d 157.

(4) Where a bill to review a former decree for error appearing on the face of the record was dismissed on defendant's motion, the question whether there was any error apparent on the face of the record is one of law.—Rudolph v. Hunt, 286 F. 1007, 52 App.D.C. 343, certiorari denied 43 S.Ct. 521, 262 U.S. 744, 67 L.Ed. 1211.

(5) Where admissions in pleadings, together with stipulated ultimate facts, require judgment for plaintiff, it is error of law, reviewable on appeal, if court enter judgment for defendant; and, if plaintiff is entitled to judgment on stipulated ultimate facts, fact that parties introduced evidence on other theories does not deprive him of right to reversal.—Lumbermen's Trust Co. v. Town of Ryegate, C.C.A.Mont., 61 F.2d 14, reversing, D.C., 50 F.2d 219.

81. U.S.—U. S. v. Mammoth Oil Co., C.C.A.Wyo., 14 F.2d 705, reversing, D.C., 5 F.2d 330, and certiorari granted Mammoth Oil Co. v. U. S., 47 S.Ct. 332, 273 U.S. 686, 71 L.Ed. 840, affirmed 48 S.Ct. 1, 275 U.S. 13, 72 L.Ed. 137.

4 C.J. p 649 note 36.

Decree will be disregarded on appeal in so far as it declares mortgage void, where in that respect it has no relation to, or bearing on, actual relief accorded, no relief having been sought as against mortgage.—Zaring v. Strauss & Co., C.C.A.Idaho, 30 F.2d 313.

One of defendant's pleas need not be considered if the uncontroverted evidence sustains its other plea.—Sponge Exch. Bank of Tarpon Springs v. Commercial Credit Co., C.C.A.Fla., 263 F. 20, certiorari denied Commercial Credit Co. v. Sponge Exch. Bank of Tarpon Springs, 40 S.Ct. 587, 253 U.S. 496, 64 L.Ed. 1030.

Assignments of error on cross writ, which are contingent and in the alternative, need not be reviewed where judgment for defendant, which sued out the cross writ, is affirmed.—Proctor Coal Co. v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., Ga., 236 F. 910, 150 C.C.A. 172.

Authority to amend findings

Where the parties agree that the trial court's original and so-called supplemental findings correctly reflect the facts, the reviewing court may consider the whole of the findings without passing on the trial court's authority to amend in the manner adopted.—Hayes v. Kelley, C.C.A.Or., 112 F.2d 897.

Expiration of injunction

That plaintiff's right to an injunction expired pendente lite does not relieve court from duty of determining substantial issues existing when case is argued on appeal.—Standard Fashion Co. v. Magrane Houston Co., Mass., 259 F. 793, 170 C.C.A. 593, affirming 251 F. 559, 163 C.C.A. 553, and certiorari granted 40 S.Ct. 54, 250 U.S. 658, 63 L.Ed. 1193, affirmed 42 S.Ct. 360, 258 U.S. 346, 66 L.Ed. 653.

Error of district court in treating evidence as conclusive

Where federal district court fell into error in treating survey and patent of federal government as conclusive on question whether land was upland or tideland, circuit court of appeals was not required to review evidence and determine whether land involved was tideland.—Borax Consolidated v. City of Los Angeles, Cal., 56 S.Ct. 23, 296 U.S. 10, 80 L.Ed. 9, affirming, C.C.A., City of Los Angeles v. Borax Consolidated, 74 F.2d 901, reversing, D.C., 5 F.Supp. 281, certiorari granted Borax Consolidated v. City of Los Angeles, 55 S.Ct. 921, 295 U.S. 729, 79 L.Ed. 1679, rehearing denied 56 S.Ct. 304, 296 U.S. 664, 80 L.Ed. 473.

83. U.S.—Powell v. Maryland Trust Co., C.C.A.Va., 125 F.2d 260, certiorari denied 62 S.Ct. 1041, 316 U.S. 671, 86 L.Ed. 1746, and 62 S.Ct. 1046, 316 U.S. 671, 86 L.Ed. 1746—City of High Point v. 4 C.J. p 649 note 35 [b].

Review of moot questions generally see Appeal and Error § 1455.

Questions which "have not yet arisen and probably never will arise" will not be discussed.—Murphy v. Kerr, C.C.A.N.M., 5 F.2d 908, 41 A. L.R. 1359, affirming, D.C., 296 F. 536.

Matters which may become moot as the proceedings go forward should not be determined.—Beaunit Mills v. Eday Fabric Sales Corporation, C.C. A.N.Y., 124 F.2d 563.

Questions held not moot

(1) That employer had paid compensation award did not render moot questions as to propriety of award, on appeal by employer's insurance carrier.—Baltimore & Philadelphia Steamboat Co. v. Norton, C.C.A.Pa., 48 F.2d 57, affirming, D.C., 40 F.2d 530, and certiorari granted 52 S.Ct. 18, 284 U.S. 602, 76 L.Ed. 516, modified on other grounds 52 S.Ct. 187, 284 U.S. 408, 76 L.Ed. 366.

(2) Where state railroad commission did not grant certificate to operator of interstate bus line, believing that federal statute had deprived commission of jurisdiction, matter involved in temporary injunction restraining interference with operator's business held not moot because interstate commerce commission had begun to function under federal statute, where intention to prevent operation because operator had no state certificate persisted.—Douglass v. Pan-American Bus Lines, C.C.A.Fla., 81 F.2d 222.

Transfer to equity side of court

Where district court did not have jurisdiction of suit, it is not material to determine on appeal whether it was properly transferred from law to equity side of court.—Davis v. McFarland, C.C.A.Tex., 15 F.2d 612, certiorari denied 47 S.Ct. 457, 273 U. S. 754, 71 L.Ed. 875.

86. U.S.—C. T. C. Inv. Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Ill., 108 F.2d 383—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Bacalis, C.C.A.Fla., 94 F.2d 200—Setchell v. Moore, C. C.A.Kan., 89 F.2d 236—American Smelting & Refining Co. v. River-and to assignments of error to rulings admitting or excluding evidence [87] or giving, granting, or refusing instructions.[88] So, when not essential to a decision of the case, the court will not consider constitutional questions,[89] or the question whether the action or claim was barred by the statute of limitations.[90] Where a judgment is reversed on one ground, other grounds of reversal assigned will not ordinarily be passed on, as the same questions may not arise on a subsequent appeal.[91] The court will avoid, except when clearly necessary, initial construction of local laws.[92]

Review dependent on mode of trial in lower court. It has been declared in the circuit court of appeals that at common law, and under the Seventh Amendment to the federal Constitution, questions of law only are reviewable on appeal in actions at law,[93] and that any question of law is reviewable in a trial before a court without a jury which is reviewable in a trial before a jury.[94] Where a plaintiff elected to prosecute his remedy at law, the circuit court of appeals cannot review the case as though brought in admiralty.[95]

Where a case was submitted on an agreed statement of facts, the appellate court must look to these facts, and not to the pleadings, in determining whether the judgment rendered may stand.[96] An agreed statement of facts on which an action at law is tried to the court is in the nature of a special verdict,[97] and on appeal the court will consider the sufficiency of the statement to support the judgment,[98] but only if the agreed facts contain all the facts essential to a judgment,[99] and not if the statement was of the evidentiary, as distinguished from the ultimate, facts.[1]

With respect to an appeal in an equity suit, it has been said that the circuit court of appeals acts as something more than a mere court of error.[2]

Validity of statute; equitable jurisdiction

In action to enjoin enforcement of National Labor Relations Act and for declaratory judgment declaring act invalid, where basis of petition was invalidity of act and act was held valid by supreme court, circuit court of appeals will not consider issue of whether equitable jurisdiction exists, since order for temporary injunction must be reversed on issue of validity.—Beman v. 2. U.S.—Roosevelt v. Missouri State Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Ark., 70 F.2d 939.

"The absence of a legislative mandate [with respect to the priority of a claim for personal injuries or death of a railroad employee] must not be treated as an absolution of our judicial responsibility in the case. The very nature and purpose of chancery jurisdiction requires that we do not

An appeal in an equity case brings the entire case before the court for review,[3] and every issue not there urged is waived;[4] but the refusal of the trial court to pass on objections to evidence during the trial is not subject to review on appeal.[5] As far as an equitable plea interposed in a law action is concerned, the circuit court of appeals may review the case as an appeal in a case in equity;[6] and the same is true of an answer and cross petition in the nature of a bill of interpleader.[7]

While a referee's report dealing entirely with conclusions of law has been held reviewable by the circuit court of appeals,[8] that court, strictly speaking, can review only action of the court below, and not that of the referee.[9] Where a case was tried before a referee, the only questions open to the reviewing court are whether the conclusions of law are supported by the findings of fact[10] and whether the referee's findings support the judgment entered;[11] where the referee's findings were adopted by the trial court the sufficiency of the facts found to warrant the judgment will be reviewed as though the findings were wholly made by the trial court.[12]

Where the parties and the court agreed that the jury should bring in a special verdict on a fact issue, the reviewing court may not reëxamine the facts on that issue, but may consider the questions decided by the court without the intervention of the jury.[13]

Theory and grounds of decision of lower court. A circuit court of appeals is concerned, on review, with the correctness of the action of the court below, without regard to the reasons that moved the court,[14] except as those reasons may throw light on close our eyes and conscience to those natural and compelling equities which are sufficiently broad to furnish the basis for a sound governing principle in the situation presented."—Reconstruction Finance Corporation v. Missouri-Kansas-Texas R. Co., C.C.A.Ark., 122 F.2d 326, 335.

Transfer to equity side; consolidation

(1) Where suit was filed at law, but on filing of cross complaint general jurisdiction in equity was conferred and cause transferred to equity, general judgment in equity is reviewable as in a cause presenting only equitable issues.—Hollandsworth v. William Mead Tie Co., C.C.A.Ky., 26 F.2d 33.

(2) Where on defendants' motion cause was transferred to equity docket without objection, and plaintiff invoked power of equity to impress a trust, although primary redress sought was damage for fraud, merits of case will, on defendants' appeal, be reviewed as on an equity appeal.—Kershaw v. Julien, C.C.A. Kan., 72 F.2d 528.

Appeal for failure to dismiss on additional grounds

Defendants, as against whom bill was dismissed, cannot appeal from such decree on ground that it should have been based on additional grounds, as it will be affirmed if sustainable on any ground appearing in record.—Aberly v. Craven County, N. C., C.C.A.N.C., 70 F.2d 52.

Rejection of counterclaim

Where record fails to show that counterclaim asserted was established by evidence, decree should not be reversed because counterclaim was rejected on improper ground.—Brown v. Reasoning embodied in findings

Where appeal brought up entire record and all evidence, incorrect reasoning of the lower court, although embodied in findings and conclusions, is of no controlling concern if judgment was correct and, under evidence, was justified by issues raised by pleadings.—McCluer v. Heim-Overly Realty Co., C.C.A.Mo., 71 F.2d 100.

rect on any ground or theory manifested by the record, it will not be disturbed, interfered with, or reversed because the trial court based its decision or conclusion on an insufficient, unfounded, unsound, or erroneous ground, reason, or theory.[21] The opinion of the trial court, or the reasoning therein, is not the subject of exception or assignment of error, since the opinion may be wrong and the ruling or judgment nevertheless right.[22]

However, a circuit court of appeals must adhere to the theory on which the case was tried in the lower court;[23] and it will not go beyond the record and consider questions, or affirm on grounds or theories, which are without the pleadings, evidence, findings, or issues which were tried and submitted to the jury or passed on by the court.[24]

In reviewing a ruling on a demurrer, a circuit court of appeals is not limited to the ground of the demurrer on which the lower court placed its decision, but may consider the other grounds of the demurrer;[25] an order or decree sustaining a demurrer will be affirmed if any one ground of demurrer is well taken.[26] A correct ruling on a demurrer will be upheld even though based on an erroneous reason;[27] and a final decree in favor of defendant is not to be reversed because based on a wrong ground, where his demurrer was improperly overruled.[28]

the court may affirm the judgment if it is correct on any legal ground, regardless of whether a correct reason was assigned in the court below.[29] To sustain a judgment of dismissal, appellee may rely on any of the grounds relied on by him below,[30] especially where the dismissal was general, without specification of reason;[31] and the reviewing court is not limited to a consideration of the specific reason given by the court below for its judgment.[32] A directed verdict or the judgment based thereon will be sustained where such direction was proper for any reason, regardless of the lower court's reason or the correctness thereof;[33] grounds in support of a motion for directed verdict may be properly urged in the appellate court even though not passed upon by the trial court.[34]

Until it is set aside in some lawful manner, a ruling which was not objected or excepted to, or appealed from, is binding and conclusive on a circuit court of appeals as the law of the case concerning the matter to which it is directed.[35] So, whether correct or erroneous, instructions which have not been properly challenged by objection, exception, assignment of error, or otherwise must be accepted by a circuit court of appeals as the law of the case concerning the matters with which they purport to deal; they are not open to review, and error therein is not ground for reversal.[36]

from. On exception to each of the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the judgment as a whole, the only review question open is whether the pleadings and the facts found support the judgment.[37] In case of appeal from part only of a judgment, order, or decree, the part not appealed from is not before the appellate court for review;[38] similarly, an appeal from one of several judgments, orders, or decrees does not authorize the review of any other judgment, order, or decree.[39]

On appeal from an order granting or refusing a preliminary or interlocutory injunction, the review is restricted to the propriety of the order and the existence of apparently reasonable grounds therefor; the circuit court of appeals will not ordinarily review or determine the merits of the case,[40] except as far as may be necessary in order to deter-mer, C.C.A.Mo., 36 F.2d 176, certiorari denied 50 S.Ct. 350, 281 U.S. 744, 74 L.Ed. 1157.

Absence of challenge in circuit court of appeals

Where plaintiff made no exceptions to charge, and defendant made several exceptions to charge but did not challenge the charge before circuit court of appeals on his appeal from judgment on verdict for plaintiff, the effect was the same as though no exceptions had been taken to the charge, and hence the charge was the law of the case for purposes of appeal.—F. W. Woolworth Co. v. Carriker, C.C.A.Mo., 107 F.2d 689.

37. U.S.—State Bank of New York v. Henderson County, Ky., C.C.A. Ky., 35 F.2d 859, certiorari denied Henderson County, State of Kentucky, v. State Bank of New York, 50 S.Ct. 245, 281 U.S. 728, 74 L.Ed. 1144, 1145.

Absence of formal request for remand.

Where the exceptions and assignments of error duly raise the questions, not only whether the findings of fact support the judgment, but also whether the lower court erred in not making further findings of fact as requested, a failure formally to ask the appellate court to remand the case for such further findings, supported by the evidence, as are necessary to a proper disposition of the case does not restrict the appellate court to a review of the findings actually made.—Eldredge v. U. S., C.C.A.Mich., 31 F.2d 924.

Breach of contract

On an appeal from an adverse judgment in a suit for damages for breach of contract, matters that would be involved in a suit for an accounting between the parties are not before the court.—Schmitt v. Continental-Diamond Fibre Co., C.C. A.Ill., 116 F.2d 779.

"The question is not . . . whether we [circuit court of appeals] should have made the order, but whether the trial court has departed from the rules and principles of equity in making the order."—Special School Dist. of Malvern, Hot Spring County, Ark., v. Speer, C.C.A.Ark., 75 F.2d 420, 421.

Reason for rule

"Ultimate rights should be decided only when the court is 'in possession of the materials necessary to enable it to do full and complete justice between the parties.' "—Interstate Transit v. City of Detroit, Mich., C.C.A.Mich., 46 F.2d 42, 43.

Constitutionality of law

On appeal from judgment granting preliminary injunction, circuit court of appeals will not examine constitutionality of law before facts are fully ascertainable, where constitutionality of law is the meritorious question, and such question involves any possible questions of fact.—Cone v. Rorick, C.C.A.Fla., 112 F.2d 894.

The trial court's jurisdiction to entertain the application for an injunction will be considered.—Interstate Transit v. City of Detroit, Mich., C.C. A.Mich., 46 F.2d 42—Fidler v. Roberts, C.C.A.Ill., 41 F.2d 305.

Statement of cause of action; irreparable injury

Appellate court, on appeal from interlocutory order refusing temporary injunction, may determine whether bill states cause of action and whether plaintiff will sustain irreparable injury.—Interstate Transit v. City of Detroit, Mich., C.C.A.Mich., 46 F.2d 42.

Relief clearly unwarranted

Where it clearly appears that relief by injunction is not warranted, the appellate court may consider the case on its merits, notwithstanding the appeal was from an interlocutory order granting injunction.—Alexander v. Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation, C.C.A.Okl., 51 F.2d 735, reversing, D.C., Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation v. Alexander, 35 F. 2d 43—Consolidated Cement Corporation v. Pratt, C.C.A.Kan., 47 F.2d 90—Arizona Edison Co. v. Southern Sierras Power Co., C.C.A.Ariz., 17 F. 2d 739, certiorari denied Southern Sierras Power Co. v. mine whether the trial court exceeded a reasonable discretion,[41] and especially where the rights of the parties can be determined only on full proof of the facts;[42] but the court has the right, in its discretion, to pass on and determine the merits of the case, and will do so in proper circumstances.[43] An appeal to the circuit court of appeals from an interlocutory decree granting an injunction may be taken from the whole decree, and need not be restricted to the part granting the injunction.[44] On appeal from an order appointing a receiver, the circuit court of appeals may also consider motions to dismiss the bill.[45]

On appeal from a default decree, defendant can contest the decree on the ground that it was not warranted by the bill,[46] but cannot urge insufficiency of the evidence.[47]

The scope of the review on appeal from a judgment of dismissal may depend on the basis of the dismissal, as where the dismissal was on the pleadings[48] or for want of jurisdiction.[49] The circuit

Whether there was any insuperable obstacle to the relief asked may be considered by court, and, if there was, the court may direct dismissal as requested by defendants in the district court.—Cone v. Rorick, C.C.A. Fla., 112 F.2d 894.

Dissolution of injunction

The rule that an appellate court, on appeal from an order granting a preliminary injunction, will determine only whether an abuse of discretion appears does not apply to an appeal from an order dissolving a temporary injunction.—Bothwell v. Fitzgerald, 219 F. 408, 135 C.C.A. 212.

On appeal from order denying intervention

Bondholder and judgment creditors who sought to intervene in receivership proceeding to question validity of pledge of corporation's bonds but who refused to participate in hearing on receiver's application for instructions as to whether he should proceed to have such pledge declared invalid was entitled, on appeal from orders denying intervention, to a determination of validity of pledge, since lower court's decision of that question was basis, not only for order disposing of receivership's application, but also for subsequent denial of intervention.—Slupsky v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 78 F.2d 13.

Dismissal on demurrer

On appeal from judgment of dismissal entered after sustaining of demurrer to plaintiff's petition, question is whether petition states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action either at law or in equity.—State of Missouri ex rel. and to Use of Stormfeltz v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co., C.C.A.Mo., 72 F.2d 595, certiorari denied Title Guaranty & Surety Co. v. State of Missouri ex rel. and to Use of Stormfeltz, 55 S.Ct. 404, 294 U.S. 708, 79 L.Ed. 1242.

Nature of defects in pleading

Where the trial court dismissed the bill as not stating a cause of action, the appellate court must decide whether the defects in the bill, if any, are fatal and extend to the pleading as a whole.—Martin v. Brown, C.C.A.Colo., 294 F. 436, reversing, D.C., 282 F. 717.

Contention not supported by pleading

Where nothing in petition by government against bank based on bank's transfer of bonds carrying forged indorsement indicated that government did not give bank timely notice of forgery, contention that it failed to do so cannot be considered on appeal from order dismissing petition without prejudice on ground that it failed to state cause of action.—U. S. v. City Sav. Bank & Trust Co. of Alliance, Ohio, C.C.A. Ohio, 73 F.2d 486.

Implication of allegation

On appeal from decree granting motion to dismiss bill in equity to recover amount of accounts payable, assigned by bankrupt corporation to banks of which appellees were directors and shareholders, circuit court of appeals may imply allegation, omitted from bill, that such assignments discharged appellees from liability for banks' statutory violations, where bill alleged that they procured assignments for such purpose.—Duell v. Brewer, C.C.A.N.Y., 92 F.2d 59, 112 A.L.R. 1246.

Libel per se

On appeal from dismissal of complaint for libel wherein no special damages were alleged, question before reviewing court was whether publication alleged, which was required, on appeal, to be taken for granted as having actually been made and, having been false, was libelous per se.—Sweeney v. Schenectady Union Pub. Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 122 F.2d 288, certiorari granted Schenectady Union Pub. Co. v. Sweeney, 62 S.Ct. 413, 314 U.S. 605, 86 L.Ed. 487, affirmed 62 S.Ct. 1031, 316 U.S. 642, 86 L.Ed. 1727, rehearing denied 62 S.Ct. 1266, 316 U.S. 710, 86 L.Ed. 1776.

49. U.S.—Mississippi Power & Light Co. v. City of Jackson, C.C.A.Miss., court of appeals, in remitting a case to the lower court, to be dismissed for want of federal jurisdiction on failure of plaintiff to amend his pleading, will not examine into the merits of the controversy.[50]

On appeal from a judgment for defendant on the pleadings, the main question is whether, on the facts well pleaded in the complaint, together with those alleged in the answer and not denied in the reply, the court erred in rendering judgment for defendant.[51] Where, after general demurrer to the answer, defendant stood on the answer, and judgment was rendered against him, the question on appeal is whether the averments of the answer presented a defense.[52]

Where the record shows substantial evidence to sustain a finding in favor of the party for whom the court directed a verdict, the only question reviewable is whether there was error in the declaration or application of the law by the court;[53] and, where both sides moved for a directed verdict, review is restricted to the questions of law presented, and the findings of fact may not be disturbed,[54] the only reviewable questions being whether there was any substantial evidence to support the verdict directed[55] and whether the unsuccessful movant was entitled to an instructed verdict in his favor to any extent and on any theory raised by the pleadings.[56] On assignment of error in denying a motion for a directed verdict, the only reviewable question has been said to be whether there was sufficient[57] or substantial[58] evidence to warrant a finding against appellant, or whether the evidence in support of the verdict requested was so conclusive that in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion the court should not have sustained a contrary verdict;[59] but it has been held that on such an assignment all questions fully disclosed at the trial by pleadings, evidence, and argument may be raised on appeal.[60] On assignment of error in refusing nonsuit and directed verdict, the appellate court must limit its review to the sufficiency of the evidence to submit the case and sustain the verdict, and to the correctness of the rulings on the evidence and instructions on the law.[61]

On appeal from a judgment entered after the sustaining of a demurrer to the evidence, the whole range of applicable law is open to appellant, as far, at least, as concerns any alleged error based on the court's failure to pass on declarations of law.[62]

Review of an order granting a new trial may be only for error of law and never for error of fact.[63]

Question not considered

In action to recover for conversion of stock certificates, where at close of trial both parties moved for directed verdict and orally waived jury, the appellate court cannot, on writ of error without case made, pass on question of defendant's estoppel to deny validity of issue of stock certificates, such question not arising on case made, or on process, pleadings, or judgment, or on sufficiency of findings to support judgment.—National City Bank of Chicago v. be determined on appeal in an ancillary suit.[64]

Review dependent on mode of review. The act of January 31, 1928, c 14, § 1, 28 U.S.C.A. § 861a, abolishing the writ of error and providing that all relief previously obtainable by writ of error should thereafter be obtainable by appeal, does not enlarge appellant's rights so as to permit the circuit court of appeals to review findings of fact in law cases.[65] Prior to the enactment of the statute, a distinction was made between a writ of error, as bringing up matters of law only, and an appeal, as bringing up matters of both law and fact;[66] the review on a writ of error extended and was confined to errors of law apparent on the record, and did not extend to questions of fact.[67]

Stipulation as to matters reviewed. The parties cannot by their stipulation inject into an appeal matters not determined in the cause in which the decree appealed from was rendered, or for other reasons not properly before the court, or give the appellate court jurisdiction to consider such matters;[68] but it has been held that, where counsel stipulate that in case of reversal the appellate court should pass on the merits, the court may do so even though the lower court did not pass on the merits.[69]

Matters or evidence considered in determining question. Only matters to some degree involved in the issues closed by the determination appealed from will be considered by the circuit court of appeals.[70] In order to determine what the decision is from which an appeal is taken, the court will look to its substance and its necessary legal effect and operation, rather than to its mere form.[71] The court will not consider facts other than those which were before the lower court[72] and incorporated in the rec-

Co. of Philadelphia, 57 S.Ct. 54, 299 U.S. 45, 81 L.Ed. 30.

Evidence in separate suits

Where separate suits by the United States to abate a nuisance, one instituted by the United States district attorney and the other by the attorney general of the state, were tried at the same time, the testimony, whether presented in the one suit or in the other, should be viewed as an entirety by the circuit court of appeals in passing on the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain finding of dis-

ord;[73] and the general rule is that questions, including questions of law, not passed on by the trial court cannot be raised on appeal,[74] although the appellate court has the right to notice a plain error where that is essential to prevent a miscarriage of justice.[75]

Unproved averments in a pleading should be considered surplusage and disregarded on appeal.[76] The allegations of fact contained in a pleading which a party allowed to be taken as confessed must be taken at their face value on appeal.[77]

The record on a former appeal involving the same parties may be considered on appeal.[78]

In determining whether there was error in granting or refusing instructions, the instructions offered should be considered together with the oral charge;[79] and the fact that different verdicts were

Recital in judgment but not in bill

Recital in judgment cannot be considered by reviewing court where it does not appear in bill.—Moline Pressed Steel Co. v. Dayton Toy & Specialty Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 30 F.2d 16.

Facts relating to pending action

(1) Facts outside record relating to another pending action in same court may be noticed on appeal, when necessary to determination, and when presented by concession of counsel or satisfactory evidence.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Board of Directors of Red River Levee Dist. No. 1, C.C.A.Ark., 32 F. 2d 124.

(2) On appeal from decree directing certain interrogatories in bill of discovery to be answered, reviewing court will take notice of records of court in which action is pending, in aid of which bill of discovery has been brought, since discovery is merely ancillary to action.—Keith v. Grounds of demurrer

The reviewing court will not pass on grounds of a demurrer which have not been passed on by the lower court.—Seward v. South Florida Securities, C.C.A.Fla., 96 F.2d 964—4 C.J. p 688 note 65.

Statutes not considered below

In determining whether receiver of national bank could recover on accommodation note executed to bank by defendant at instance of president of bank to enable president to obtain funds without appearing to be a borrower from bank, circuit court of appeals must consider statutes making it an offense to aid bank officer in misapplication of money and defining a "principal," although statutes had not been presented to district court for consideration.—Federal Deposit Ins. rendered by other juries on the same issues is not persuasive of error in the instructions given.[80] Where a charge is attacked as not supported by evidence, the record must be considered as it was at the time of the charge, without regard to evidence which had been received and later stricken out.[81]

According to some authorities, evidence erroneously admitted at the trial will not be considered on appeal;[82] but hearsay testimony not objected to has been held to be properly before the reviewing court,[83] and it has been held incumbent on the court to consider evidence informally taken, without exception or assignment of error, and incorporated in the record.[84] Evidence improperly excluded in an equity suit, but brought up in the record, may be considered on appeal.[85] In determining the propriety of rejecting an offer of proof, the entire offer, and not isolated portions, should be considered.[86]

Exhibits must be examined by the appellate court, and their effect determined, where the right to the relief sought depends on them;[87] but an exhibit improperly admitted in evidence over objection must be disregarded on appeal.[88]

b. Interlocutory, Collateral, and Supplementary Proceedings and Questions

(1) On appeal from final judgment
(2) On appeal from interlocutory order
(3) On appeal from subsequent order

(1) On Appeal from Final Judgment

(a) In general
(b) Previous orders or decrees reviewable
(c) Subsequent orders and proceedings reviewable

(a) In General

An appeal from the final judgment in one action does not bring up for review orders made in another independent action.

Where there are two separate and independent actions, the court of appeals, on appeal from the judgment in one action, will not review an order made in the other action.[89]

(b) Previous Orders or Decrees Reviewable

As a general rule on appeal from a final judgment or decree, prior interlocutory orders, decisions, or rulings made in the same proceeding may be reviewed.

As a general rule the court of appeals, on appeal from a final judgment, may consider and review a prior interlocutory order or decision which involves the merits or necessarily affects the judgment,[90] provided the order, decision, or ruling is properly presented for review.[91] Such review may be had not only where the interlocutory order, decision, or ruling was not itself appealable,[92] but also where a separate appeal from the interlocutory order or decision might have been, but was not, taken.[93] Intermediate orders on matters wholly unrelated to the final judgment from which the appeal is taken, however, will not be considered or reviewed.[94]

On appeal from a final order or decree in equity every preceding interlocutory order or decree connected with the final decree and affecting the merits of the controversy is subject to review in the appellate court;[95] and this is so not only where the interlocutory order or decree was not itself appealable,[96] but also where a separate appeal from it might have been, but was not, taken.[97]

Particular matters which may be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment or decree include: An order appointing, or refusing to appoint, receivers;[98] an order making allowances to receivers and their attorneys;[99] an order or ruling on a demurrer;[1] an order granting or denying a new trial;[2] an order refusing to grant a temporary injunction;[3] and orders or rulings made in the trial of pleas in abatement.[4]

Effect of separate appeal taken from interlocutory order. The appellate court cannot be required to review the same order twice on the same grounds.[5] From this it follows that, if, on an appeal from an interlocutory order, the appellate court is required to pass on the merits of the case, a second appeal from the final decree, which challenges the same interlocutory order, can involve only matters affecting such order which have arisen subsequent to the entry thereof.[6] On the other hand, if the appellate court was not required to and did not pass on the merits of the controversy in deciding the appeal from the interlocutory order, a subsequent appeal from the final decree may properly challenge the validity of the interlocutory order and invoke a decision on the merits.[7]

(c) Subsequent Orders and Proceedings Reviewable

As a general rule, on appeal from a final judgment or decree subsequent orders and proceedings are not reviewable.

The general rule is that on appeal from a final judgment or decree subsequent orders or proceedings cannot be reviewed.[8] The principle has been applied to an order subsequently made denying a motion for a new trial,[9] a motion to reinstate the cause,[10] or an application to set aside[11] or modify[12] the judgment or decree appealed from.

(2) On Appeal from Interlocutory Order

Generally an appeal from an interlocutory order or decree does not bring up for review another order or decree, although on an appeal from an order granting or refusing a temporary injunction an order denying a motion to dismiss may be considered.

94. Appeal from judgment of dismissal
On appeal from order dismissing action without prejudice for failure of plaintiff to comply with a certain order, intermediate orders on matters wholly unrelated to order from which appeal was taken were not reviewable, since scope of review is limited by nature of decision from which appeal is taken.—Hawke v. Servicised Products Corporation, C.C.A.Ohio, 95 F.2d 710, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 592, 306 U.S. 650, 83 L.Ed. 1049.

On appeal from judgment rendered on second trial

12. U.S.—Ford Motor Co. v. Farrington, Or., 245 F. 850, 158 C.C.A. 190.

As a general rule, on an appeal from an interlocutory order or decree, another and different order or decree is not reviewable;[13] and this is particularly true where such other order or decree is merged in the one from which the appeal is taken.[14] On an appeal from an order granting or refusing a temporary injunction, however, the court of appeals may consider and review an interlocutory order of the trial court denying a motion to dismiss the bill.[15]

(3) On Appeal from Subsequent Order

As a rule an appeal from a subsequent order or decree does not bring up for review a prior order, judgment, or decree which was final and might have been appealed from.

The general rule is that a previous order, judgment, or decree which is final in its nature and from which an appeal might have been taken is not brought up by, and cannot be considered or reviewed on, an appeal from a subsequent order or decree,[16] such as an appeal from an order or decree vacating or setting aside or refusing to vacate or set aside a judgment or decree,[17] or an appeal from an order or decree enforcing and carrying into effect another decree.[18]

c. Persons Entitled to Allege Error

(1) In general

(2) Waiver of, and estoppel to allege, error

(1) In General

(a) Appellant

(b) Appellee

(c) Persons not parties in appellate court

(a) Appellant

Appellant is not entitled to complain of errors of the trial court which may be prejudicial or injurious to others, but are not so as to him.

No party can take advantage of an error committed in the trial court except the one against whom it was committed.[19] Accordingly, appellant cannot take advantage on appeal of alleged errors in the rulings, orders, decisions, or proceedings in the trial court which do not affect his interests.[20] Thus he cannot complain of alleged errors which are not prejudicial to him and affect only his coparty,[21] an adverse party or parties,[22] an intervener,[23] or persons not parties to the suit [24] or to the appeal;[25] and he cannot predicate error on rulings or decisions favorable to his coparty unless he has been injured or prejudiced thereby.[26] A fortiori, appellant cannot complain of an alleged error which did not injure, but benefited, him.[27]

(b) Appellee

An appellee who has not taken a cross appeal cannot go beyond supporting the judgment or decree under review and opposing every assignment of error.

An appellee who has not taken a cross appeal may urge in support of the judgment or decree under review any matter appearing in the record,[28] even though his argument may involve an attack upon the reasoning of the lower court [29] or an insistence upon matters overlooked, ignored,[30] or rejected [31] by it; but he may not attack the judgment or decree with a view either to enlarging his own rights thereunder or of lessening the rights of his adversary,[32] whether what he seeks is to correct an

Decisive matter

(1) The matter asserted by appellee in support of the judgment must be decisive. The failure of appellant to prove its case would not be decisive on appeal where appellee secured an affirmative judgment quieting its title and the question on appeal was whether this judgment could be affirmed.—City of Los Angeles v. Particular matters which may be urged

(1) Where treasurer's demurrer to complaint seeking recovery of taxes allegedly paid under protest under alleged invalid law was sustained, question whether plaintiffs, who had not attached to complaint receipts which they were required to obtain on paying taxes under protest, could maintain their complaint was open to treasurer on plaintiffs' appeal, in support of judgment, even though treasurer did not take a cross-appeal. —Agudo v. Sancho, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 89 F.2d 481.

Compromise and settlement

Issue raised by trial court's refusal to accept defendant's plea of accord and satisfaction was determinable on plaintiff's appeal from judgment for defendant, notwithstanding defendant did not appeal from order overruling plea and proceeded with trial on merits, since in pressing his view of legal effect of compromise settlement defendant was not attacking, but seeking to support, judgment.—Carpenter v. Amount of recovery

An appellee who has not appealed cannot complain that he was entitled to an increase or reduction, as the case may be, of the amount of the recovery.—U. S. v. (c) Persons Not Parties in Appellate Court

One not a party to the appeal cannot ordinarily allege error in the proceedings.

One who has not appealed and who is not a party to the proceedings in the appellate court has no standing to allege error.[36] So, one who was not a party to the proceedings below will not be heard to complain of such proceedings in the appellate court,[37] even though he was named as a party in the original pleading but was never served with process.[38]

One may not complain on review of errors below for which he was responsible.

A party will not be permitted on appeal to take advantage of errors in the proceedings below which he himself committed,[39] or invited or induced the trial court to commit,[40] or which were the natural consequences of his own neglect or misconduct.[41] Especially is this true where the errors were not prejudicial.[42]

bb. Jurisdiction

Jurisdiction of the subject matter of a controversy may not be acquired by consent or estoppel.

Jurisdiction of the subject matter of a controversy must exist as a matter of law, and may not be conferred by consent of the parties or by estoppel.[43]

cc. Nature and Theory of Cause and Grounds of Action or Defense

In general, a party on review may not change the theory on which the case was tried below or take a position inconsistent with that which he maintained in the trial court.

Parties cannot elect to try their causes on one theory in the lower court, and, when defeated on that theory, assume a different position in the appellate court,[44] and hence a party may not urge a reversal because the case was tried below on an erroneous theory in which he acquiesced.[45] Accordingly, when a party relies, in the trial court, on a certain ground of action or defense, he is bound thereby and will not be allowed to assume, in the appellate court, any position which is inconsistent therewith.[46] So a party may not take, on appeal, a position inconsistent with that which he maintained in the trial court with respect to the validity of certain ordinances,[47] the right of his opponent to plead limitations,[48] or the nature of his cause of action.[49]

Introducing evidence as not estoppel
Where plaintiff's evidence in suit on war risk policy showed that court was without jurisdiction, introduction of evidence to controvert evidence offered by plaintiff did not preclude government from relying on absence of jurisdiction on plaintiff's appeal.—Egan v. U. S., C.C.A.Ill., 80 F.2d 404.

48. Right recognized in trial court
Inability of corporation to plead statute of limitations for failure to comply with law could not be raised for first time on appeal where case was tried on theory recognizing capacity of corporation to plead statute.—Sacramento Suburban Fruit Lands Co. v. Melin, C.C.A.Cal., 36 F.2d 907, followed in Sacramento Suburban Fruit Lands Co. v. Curtis, 36 F.2d 923.

49. Express or implied contract
Evidence and claim for legal services showed that attorney based

Rule qualified. The rule that the parties on appeal are bound by the theory on which the action was tried below is enforced only where injustice will not result.[50]

dd. Parties

One may not complain on appeal of errors in respect of parties for which he was responsible.

A party will not be heard to assert on appeal that the proceedings below were defective for want of proper parties when the defect was caused by his own neglect or misconduct.[51]

ee. Pleadings

One may not on review complain of errors with respect to pleadings where he invited such errors, or where his objection is inconsistent with the position taken below.

The rule that on review one may not take a position inconsistent with the theory, grounds of action, or defense followed and adopted below, see supra subdivision c (2) (a) cc of this section applies to errors in respect of pleadings [52] and in respect of matters involving issues, proof, and variance;[53] and the principle of estoppel to allege invited error considered supra subdivision c (2) (a) aa of this section prevents a party from asserting as error defects in his adversary's pleadings caused by the party complaining thereof.[54]

ff. Evidence and Mode of Proof

One may not complain on review of error which he has committed or invited in respect of rulings on evidence and the mode of proof in general, or urge in such connection an objection inconsistent with the position he took in the trial court.

The rule that one may not complain on review of errors committed or invited by himself, or raise objections inconsistent with his position below, as heretofore considered in subdivision c (2) (a) aa, cc of this section, applies to errors claimed in respect of rulings on evidence and mode of proof in general.[55]

Burden of proof. One who voluntarily assumes the burden of proof will not be heard on appeal to assert that the burden was on the other party.[56]

Admission of evidence. A party may not complain, on appeal, of the admission of certain evidence where its admission was due to his own fault [57] or where he objected to the withdrawal of the evidence.[58] So an appellant may not assert as error the admission of evidence which he himself has introduced [59] or which he has himself elicited or brought out, as by cross-examination of his adversary's witnesses in the trial of the cause below.[60] Moreover, a party who introduces improper evidence such as that which is incompetent, or evidence inadmissible under the pleadings, will not be

Party bound by election
Plaintiff electing to proceed on own account, after being apprised on former appeal and subsequent proceedings before master that third party should be additional plaintiff, was bound by election.—Lawrence-Williams Co. v. Societe Enfants Gombault Et Cie, C.C.A.Ohio, 52 F.2d 774, certiorari denied Societe Enfants Gombault Et Cie v. Lawrence-Williams Co., 52 S.Ct. 406, 285 U.S. 549, 76 L.Ed. 940.

53. Case tried on theory issue was presented
In action for commission for procuring reinsurance contract, where plaintiffs themselves brought out evidence showing that they represented adverse principals without knowledge of both, and defendant, at close of whole case, moved to dismiss complaint on such ground and plaintiffs did not suggest that issue was not in case but were content to meet it, plaintiffs could not, on defendant's appeal, rely on defendant's failure to plead such defense.—Wolfe v. International Reinsurance Corporation, C. C.A.N.Y., 73 F.2d 267, certiorari denied 55 S.Ct. 637, 294 U.S. 725, 79 L.Ed. 1256.

Where defendant read in evidence depositions taken by plaintiff, defendant cannot complain on appeal that the depositions contained incompetent and hearsay evidence.—Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Collins Produce Co., Ill., 235 F. 857, 149 C.C.A. 169, affirmed 39 S.Ct. 189, 249 U.S. 186, 63 L.Ed. 552.

Exclusion of evidence. Where a litigant seeks a reversal on a ruling of the trial court rejecting evidence offered for a specific purpose, he cannot in the appellate court change the nature of the limitation of his offer, or the ground or theory upon which he asked the lower court to admit the testimony;[62] and a party on whose objection evidence was excluded in the trial court cannot avail himself of such evidence in support of his contentions on appeal.[63]

Weight and sufficiency. The general rule that on review one may not complain of error which he has committed or invited, or take a position on appeal inconsistent with that adopted below, as has been explained supra subdivision c (2) (a) aa, cc of this section, applies to errors alleged in respect of the weight and sufficiency of evidence.[64] Thus it is not competent for a party to assume, on appeal, an attitude different from that which he occupied at the trial, and to object to the judgment against him because of the want of evidence which was excluded at his instance.[65] In like manner a party is estopped to complain of the judgment for insufficiency of evidence to support it where he supplied the deficiency by his own admissions in the court below.[66]

The fact that certain documents were not produced at the trial cannot be taken advantage of, on appeal, by one having possession of the documents.[67]

gg. Instructions and Refusal Thereof

One may not complain on review of errors in respect of instructions which were committed or invited by himself, nor take a position inconsistent with that adopted below.

The general rules, stated supra subdivision c (2) (a) aa, cc of this section, which preclude appellant from raising errors committed or invited by himself, or taking on appeal a position inconsistent with that adopted on the trial, apply to errors in respect of instructions.[68] Thus, appellant will not be permitted, on appeal, to allege that an instruction is erroneous or improper where the instruction was given at his request by the trial court;[69] where it is substantially the same as one requested by him;[70] or where it is in accord with the theory advanced by him at the trial.[71] He will not be permitted to allege that an instruction is erroneous where the error arose from a consideration of improper evidence introduced by himself,[72] and he cannot assign as error an inconsistency in the charge which was produced by the giving of an erroneous instruction which he requested.[73]

Failure or refusal to instruct. Appellant may not complain on appeal of the trial court's failure to give a particular charge which would be inconsistent with one requested by himself;[74] nor can he complain of the court's refusal to direct the jury to disregard evidence which he himself has introduced.[75] So where appellant objected in the trial court to the giving of an instruction previously requested by him, he cannot complain, on appeal, of

72. U.S.—Phenix Ins. Co. v. Wilcox & Gibbs Guano Co., S.C., 65 F. 724, 13 C.C.A. 88.

73. U.S.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Griffin, Wis., 80 F. 278, 25 C.C.A. 413.

74. As to burden of proof
Plaintiff may not complain of the court's failure to charge that the burden of proving suicide was on defendant where plaintiff requested the court to charge that the burden was on him.—Mitchell v. New England Mut. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Va., 123 F.2d 246.

75. U.S.—Southern Pac. Co. v. Hall, Cal., 100 F. 760, 41 C.C.A. 59.

the court's failure to give the requested instruction.[76]

hh. Submission of Issue or Question to Jury

One may not complain on review of the submission of issues in accordance with his own requests, nor where he is otherwise estopped to raise an objection.

The general rules, stated supra subdivision c (2) (a) aa, cc of this section, that one may not complain on review of errors committed or invited by himself nor adopt a position inconsistent with that taken below, apply to errors in respect of the submission of issues or questions to the jury.[77] Thus a party is estopped to predicate error on the submission of an issue or question to the jury, where the submission was made in compliance with his request;[78] where the issue submitted was raised by his own pleadings and evidence;[79] where the submission of the issue was invited, or its propriety recognized by instructions requested by him;[80] or where the submission was in accordance with the theory on which the case was tried by him.[81] So where a party causes a question to be submitted to the jury as one of fact, he cannot thereafter take the position that the question was one of law and should not have been submitted.[82]

Conversely, a party may not assert error in the failure of the trial court to submit a particular issue or question to the jury where his own testimony, not claimed to have been mistaken, rendered such issue or question immaterial,[83] or where he requested that it should not be submitted to the jury;[84] and he cannot assert error in the submission of part of the fact issues to the court where he contended at the trial that all the issues should have been so submitted.[85]

Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 50 (a), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, appellant is not precluded on appeal from claiming that the trial court erred in directing a verdict for appellee merely because both parties moved for a directed verdict.[86]

ii. Other Matters

One may be estopped on appeal to complain of errors with respect to the mode and conduct of the trial, rulings made on motions, findings, the judgment or decree entered, the amount of recovery, and the proceedings for review.

The general rules, stated supra subdivision c (2) (a) aa, cc of this section, which preclude appellant from raising errors committed or invited by himself, or taking on appeal a position inconsistent with that adopted below, apply to errors relating to the mode and conduct of the trial,[87] rulings made

76. U.S.—Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Berry, C.C.A.N.J., 48 F.2d 1052, certiorari denied 52 S.Ct. 7, 284 U.S. 617, 76 L.Ed. 527.

77. Failure to elect between special and general verdict
Appellant cannot complain on appeal of the submission of the issues to the jury in the form of a special, rather than general verdict, where he was given the choice in the trial court of a general or special verdict and declined to make any election.—Cooley v. New York Cent. R. Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 80 F.2d 816, certiorari denied New York Cent. R. Co. v. Cooley, 56 S.Ct. 599, 297 U.S. 721, 80 L.Ed. 1005.

78. U.S.—Ætna Ins. Co. v. Murray, C.C.A.Okl., 66 F.2d 289—Swofford Bros. Dry-Goods Co. v. Smith-McCord Dry-Goods Co., Ind.T., 85 F. 417, 29 C.C.A. 239.

Issue not supported by evidence
Where defendant requested instructions submitting a particular issue, he cannot complain that those given on behalf of plaintiff, dealing with the same issue, were not supported by the evidence.—Stanton v. Hample, C.C.A.Wash., 272 F. 424.

79. U.S.—Kingrey v. New York, C. & St. L. R. Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 297 F. 376—Whiteside v. W. T. Bailey Lumber Co., C.C.A.Minn., 274 F. 96.

80. U.S.—Detroit, T. & I. R. Co. v. Hahn, C.C.A.Ohio, 47 F.2d 59, certiorari denied 51 S.Ct. 489, 283 U.S. 842, 75 L.Ed. 1452.

81. U.S.—Weinstein v. Studebaker Corp., D.C.Pa., 238 F. 963.

82. U.S.—Crowe v. Gary State Bank, C.C.A.Ind., 123 F.2d 513—Van De Water v. Order of United Commercial Travelers of America, C.C.A.N.Y., 77 F.2d 331, affirming, D.C., 7 F.Supp. 369—Sucesores de Bianchi v. Shope, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 299 F. 44—Swofford Bros. Dry-Goods Co. v. Smith-McCord Dry-Goods Co., Ind.T., 85 F. 417, 29 C.C.A. 239.

83. U.S.—Aldrich v. Erie R. Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 2 F.2d 439.

84. U.S.—Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Norton Iron Works, C.C.A.Ky., 279 F. 32.

85. U.S.—Pacific Indemnity Co. v. McDonald, C.C.A.Or., 107 F.2d 446.

86. U.S.—Vilter Mfg. Co. v. Rolaff, C.C.A.Mo., 110 F.2d 491.

Under former practice, where each party requested, without qualification, a peremptory instruction in his favor, and the court granted one of the requests, the parties were estopped from claiming on appeal that any question should have been submitted to the jury.—La Crosse Plow Co. v. Pagenstecher, Neb., 253 F. 46, 165 C.C.A. 644, certiorari denied 39 S.Ct. 11, 248 U.S. 572, 63 L.Ed. 427—U. S. v. Bishop, Minn., 125 F. 181, 60 C.C.A. 123.

87. U.S.—Smith v. Daniel, C.C.A.Tenn., 46 F.2d 740, certiorari denied 51 S.Ct. 651, 283 U.S. 852, 75 L.Ed. 1460.

Improper argument
Counsel for appellant who has been injured by improper argument to the jury should not ordinarily be permitted to take advantage of errors which he has invited or provoked or not complained of until after verdict, unless the objectionable remarks are so grossly prejudicial as to call for action by the appellate court in the public interest.—London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Woelfle, C.C.A.Mo., 83 F.2d 325.

Transfer to equity docket
Appellant may not assert error in the trial court's refusal to transfer to the equity docket a particular issue where the error, if any, in the court's ruling resulted from incorrect statements of counsel for both sides which misled the court.—Mutual Ben. Health & Accident Ass'n v. Warrell, C.C.A.Ark., 96 F.2d 447, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 71, 305 U.S. 612, 83 L.Ed. 390, rehearing denied 59 S.Ct. 142, 305 U.S. 671, 83 L.Ed. 435.

on motions,[88] findings made by the trial court or a referee,[89] the judgment, order, or decree entered,[90] the amount of recovery or extent of relief,[91] and the proceedings for review.[92]

(b) Assent to, or Recognition of, Validity of Proceedings

aa. In general

bb. By pleading over or proceeding to trial

cc. By taking or failing to take an appeal

aa. In General

Assent to, or recognition of, the validity of matters not of a fundamental character precludes a litigant from objecting thereto on review.

Where one has assented to or recognized the validity of matters or proceedings not constituting fundamental error, he may not complain thereof on review.[93] Thus, where fundamental error is not involved, one may not question matters or proceedings to which he has consented[94] or to which he has acquiesced.[95] This principle has been applied so as to preclude a consenting or acquiescing litigant from raising objections on review with respect to pleadings;[96] evidence;[97] and from raising ob-

88. Ruling procured or condoned by complainant
The entry of an order granting or denying a motion cannot be assigned as error by one who procured, invited, or condoned the making and entry of the order.—Cybur Lumber Co. v. Erkhart, Miss., 247 F. 284, 159 C.C.A. 378—Walton v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., Minn., 56 F. 1006, 6 C.C.A. 223.

89. Findings requested by complainant
A party cannot assert as error a finding of a judge or referee made at his request.—National Loan & Investment Co. v. Rockland Co., Minn., 94 F. 335, 36 C.C.A. 370.

90. U.S.—Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. v. Tucker, C.C.A.Mo., 126 F.2d 396, affirming, D.C., Tucker v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S., 36 F.Supp. 809, certiorari denied 62 S.Ct. 1298, 316 U.S. 699, 86 L.Ed. 1768.

Where party procures rendition or entry of a judgment, decree, or order, or is responsible for error therein, he is estopped to assert on appeal that it is erroneous.—Grubstake Inv. Ass'n v. Southern Natural Gas Co., C.C.A.Tex., 20 F.2d 1.

91. U.S.—Waggaman v. General Finance Co. of Philadelphia, C.C.A.Pa., 116 F.2d 254—Gravelle Const. Dist. No. 1, of Bassett-Wardell Road Improvement Dist. No. 3 of Mississippi County, C.C.A. Ark., 82 F.2d 391.

92. U.S.—Fraser v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, C.C.A., 25 F.2d 653.

Party inviting ruling by appellate court on a particular point cannot, after such ruling, assert that the appellate court had no power so to rule.—Gratz v. McKee, C.C.A.Mo., 270 F. 713, reversing 258 F. 335, 169 C.C.A. 351, certiorari granted McKee v. Gratz, 41 S.Ct. 535, 256 U.S. 687, 65 L.Ed. 1172, and affirmed 43 S.Ct. 16, 260 U.S. 127, 67 L.Ed. 167.

Jurisdiction of appellate court
(1) Appellee held not estopped to assert that the court of appeals was without jurisdiction of the appeal.—George v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., N.J., 55 S.Ct. 229, 293 U.S. 377, 79 L.Ed. 439, reversing, C.C.A., Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. George, 69 F.2d 871, certiorari granted George v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., 55 S.Ct. 82, 293 U.S. 544, 79 L.Ed. 649.

(2) Prior to the abolition of the writ of error by statute, it was held that no action of defendant in error could estop him from raising the question whether the writ of error was taken within time provided by statute.—Vaughan v. American Ins. Co. of Newark, N. J., C.C.A.Ga., 15 F.2d 526.

Bill of exceptions
Party not obliged to serve amendments to bill of exceptions did not lose right to object to court's jurisdiction to sign bill by failure to serve amendments on time.—Farmers' Union Grain Co. v. Hallet & Carey Co., C.C.A.S.D., 22 F.2d 796, denying rehearing in 21 F.2d 42, certiorari denied 48 S.Ct. 304, 276 U.S. 623, 72 L.Ed. 737.

93. U.S.—Women's Catholic Order of Foresters v. City of Ennis, C.C.A.Tex., 116 F.2d 270, certiorari denied Women's Catholic Order of Foresters v. Ennis, Tex., 61 S.Ct. 1112, 313 U.S. 589, 85 L.Ed. 1544—Lansing B. Warner, Inc., v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 75 F.2d 483—Hayes v. Tootle-Lacy Nat. Bank, C.C.A.Kan., 72 F.2d 429—Hoosier Veneer Co. v. Trusts & Guarantee Co., C.C.A.Ill., 283 F. 1, certiorari denied Trusts & Guarantee Co. v. Hoosier Veneer Co., 43 S.Ct. 97, 260 U.S. 738, 67 L.Ed. 489—Pease v. Rathbun-Jones Engineering Co., Tex., 228 F. 273, 142 C.C.A. 565, affirmed 37 S.Ct. 283, 243 U.S. 273, 61 L.Ed. 715.

Where existence of certain fact is assumed in the trial court, and the trial proceeds on that assumption without objection, neither party may question the existence of such fact in the appellate court.—Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Shelton, S.C., 220 F. 247, 136 C.C.A. 509.

94. U.S.—Securities and Exchange Commission v. Jones, C.C.A.N.Y., 85 F.2d 17, affirming, D.C., 15 F.Supp. 321, certiorari denied Jones v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 57 S.Ct. 46, 299 U.S. 581, 81 L.Ed. 428—Baxter v. McGee, C.C.A.Ark., 82 F.2d 695, certiorari denied McGee v. Baxter, 56 S.Ct. 948, 298 U.S. 680, 80 L.Ed. 1401—S. A. Lynch Enterprise Finance Corporation v. Dulion, C.C.A.Ga., 45 F.2d 6—Olsness v. Home Ins. Co., C.C.A.N.D., 14 F.2d 907—Brown v. U. S., Ill., 196 F. 351, 116 C.C.A. 171.

95. U.S.—Lake City, Nettleton & Bay Road Improvement Dist. No. 1 of Craighead, Ark. v. Luehrmann, C.C.A.Ark., 113 F.2d 458—Street Grading Dist. No. 60 of Little Rock, Ark., v. Hagadorn, Ark., 186 F. 451, 108 C.C.A. 429, certiorari denied 32 S.Ct. 524, 223 U.S. 721, 56 L.Ed. 630.

96. U.S.—Frank v. Giesy, C.C.A.Ga., 117 F.2d 122.

Form and sufficiency of pleadings
(1) Defendant, having elected to proceed under short form of petition on account for work and labor without objection, cannot complain on appeal that, because of such pleading, it was precluded from asserting various elements of counterclaim.—Southwark Foundry & Machine Co. v. Franz Foundry & Machine Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 48 F.2d 714.

(2) Objection that excuse for delay in transporting goods was not pleaded is waived on appeal where case was tried and argued as though excuse were in issue.—Cohn v. U. S. Shipping Board, C.C.A.Tenn., 20 F. 2d 56.

97. Admission of evidence
One is precluded from objecting on appeal to the admission of evidence where he consented to, or acquiesced

jections on review with respect to instructions;[98] mode and conduct of trial;[99] submission of questions or issues to the jury[1] or court;[2] verdict;[3] findings;[4] judgments, decrees, or orders;[5] and the amount of recovery or extent of relief.[6]

bb. By Pleading Over or Proceeding to Trial

By pleading over or proceeding to trial a party waives errors in an adverse decision on demurrer or motion to dismiss.

One who pleads over or proceeds to trial on the merits, after an adverse decision on demurrer[7] or motion to dismiss,[8] will not be permitted to allege error in such decision, as he will be presumed to have acquiesced therein.

cc. By Taking or Failing to Take an Appeal

By failing to appeal a litigant acquiesces in the judgment or decree. By taking an appeal an appellant recognizes the validity of matters and proceedings inherent in the appeal.

One who fails to take an appeal from a judgment or decree,[9] and who voluntarily elects to pursue a course inconsistent with appeal,[10] waives or in, its admission.—Deering Harvester Co. v. Kelly, Ohio, 103 F. 261, 43 C. C.A. 225.

98. U.S.—Meyer & Chapman State Bank v. First Nat. Bank, C.C.A. Wyo., 291 F. 42.

99. Irregularity in trying case on affidavits would not be considered on appeal where both parties consented to such trial.—U. S. v. C. I. T. Corporation, C.C.A.N.Y., 93 F.2d 469.

Defendant, consenting to trial at law, waived objection that remedy was in equity.—Mobile Shipbuilding Co. v. Federal Bridge & Structural Co., C.C.A.Ill., 280 F. 292, certiorari denied 43 S.Ct. 88, 260 U.S. 726, 67 L.Ed. 483.

Law action tried as suit in equity

(1) It was of no consequence that an action at law was tried as a suit in equity where facts were agreed to and the case was submitted to the court with the consent of both parties.—U. S. v. Havner, C.C.A.Iowa, 101 F.2d 161, reversing, D.C., 21 F. Supp. 985.

(2) One consenting to, or acquiescing in, the trial of a law issue on the equity side of the court could not be heard on appeal to contend that the cause or issue should have been transferred to the law side.—Penley Bros. Co. v. Hall, C.C.A.Me., 84 F.2d 371, vacating, D.C., Hall v. Penley Bros. Co., 9 F.Supp. 936—Williamson v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Corporation, C.C.A.Ark., 59 F.2d 918, modifying, D.C., Williamson v. Chicago Mill & Lumber Co., 51 F.2d 551.

1. Issue of waiver

Defendant, whose counsel withdrew objection to evidence tending to show that by its conduct it had waived its right to recover damages pleaded as a counterclaim, and expressed his willingness that the question be submitted to the jury, was estopped to complain of such submission.—Houck v. Seaboard Fuel Corporation, D.C.Pa., 278 F. 686.

2. Objections to submission not available

(1) Plaintiff's acquiescence and silence, when the court interpreted joint motions for directed verdict as a submission to the court of the law and the facts, and plaintiff's failure to indicate any desire to offer rebuttal proofs prevented plaintiff from complaining of acceptance by the court of such submission at a possibly premature stage of the case.—General Motors Corporation v. Bellevue Sav. Bank Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 300 F. 324.

(2) Although parties requested instructions other than peremptory instruction, where court stated that request for peremptory instruction by each party operated to submit the case to the court, and both parties assented, the other instructions were waived, and case submitted to the court for findings of fact and conclusions of law, and either party was estopped to insist that case should have been submitted on other instructions.—Meyer & Chapman State Bank v. First Nat. Bank, C.C.A.Wyo., 291 F. 42.

3. Sufficiency of evidence to support verdict

Where plaintiffs in error agreed at the trial that the jury should be directed to return a verdict for defendant in error for some amount under the pleadings and evidence, an objection on review that defendant in error had failed to introduce any evidence proving a joint liability was unavailable.—McBride v. Neal, Ill., 214 F. 966, 131 C.C.A. 262.

4. Findings accepted as correct

Appellees were not entitled to rely on argument in conflict with findings of the trial court which they had accepted as correct.—Thomas B. Bishop Co. v. Santa Barbara County, C.C.A.Cal., 96 F.2d 198, certiorari denied Santa Barbara County v. Thomas B. Bishop Co., 59 S.Ct. 84, 305 U. S. 623, 83 L.Ed. 398.

5. U.S.—Lake City, Nettleton & Bay Road Improvement Dist. No. 1 of Craighead County, Ark. v. Luehrmann, C.C.A.Ark., 113 F.2d 458—Mayer v. White, C.C.A.Kan., 12 F. 2d 710—Brown v. U. S., Ill., 196 F. 351, 116 C.C.A. 171.

Consent to entry of injunction waived any error of decision that might have been made.—Securities and Exchange Commission v. Jones, C.C.A.N.Y., 85 F.2d 17, affirming, D. C., 15 F.Supp. 321, certiorari denied Jones v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 57 S.Ct. 46, 299 U.S. 581, 81 L.Ed. 428.

Trial court without jurisdiction

The rule that no party can complain on appeal of an error acquiesced in by him cannot prevail where the trial court was without jurisdiction to enter the decree consented to.—Street Grading Dist. No. 60 of Little Rock, Ark. v. Hagadorn, Ark., 186 F. 451, 108 C.C.A. 429, certiorari denied 32 S.Ct. 524, 223 U.S. 721, 56 L.Ed. 630.

6. U.S.—S. A. Lynch Enterprise Finance Corporation v. Dulion, C. C.A.Ga., 45 F.2d 6—Colorado Cent. Consolidated Min. Co. v. Turck, Colo., 54 F. 262, 4 C.C.A. 313.

7. U.S.—Frishmuth v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 107 F. 169.

4 C.J. p 721 note 59.

8. U.S.—Sigafus v. Porter, N.Y., 21 S.Ct. 34, 179 U.S. 116, 45 L.Ed. 34, reversing 84 F. 430, 28 C.C.A. 443—Meeker v. Baxter, C.C.A.N.Y., 83 F.2d 183.

9. Error in ruling as to venue held waived by failure to appeal.—Jones Store Co. v. Dean, C.C.A.Mo., 56 F.2d 110, certiorari denied Dean v. Jones Store Co., 52 S.Ct. 641, 286 U.S. 559, 76 L.Ed. 1292.

Conclusion of court accepted as correct

Conclusion of district court that plaintiff was not entitled to recover a certain part of amount sued for was accepted as correct, where plaintiff had not appealed.—Fanchon & Marco v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows Co., C. C.A.Cal., 125 F.2d 101.

10. U.S.—Women's Catholic Order of Foresters v. City of Ennis, C.C.A. Tex., 116 F.2d 270, certiorari denied Women's Catholic Order of Foresters v. Ennis, Tex., 61 S.Ct. 1112, 313 U.S. 589, 85 L.Ed. 1544.

releases any errors which might be present in the suit or action in which the judgment or decree was rendered.

By taking an appeal appellant recognizes, and is estopped to challenge, the validity of matters and proceedings inherent in the appeal.[11]

d. Amendment, Additional Proofs, and Trial of Cause Anew

(1) Amendment of proceedings of lower court
(2) Additional proofs
(3) Trial de novo

(1) Amendment of Proceedings of Lower Court

(a) In general
(b) As to pleadings

(a) In General

Where practicable, amendments that may be made below may generally be made in the court of appeals.

Where practicable, amendments that may be made below may generally be made in the court of appeals.[12] Thus, where a case has been tried on the merits, and the allowance, on appeal, of an amendment as to parties will be a technical matter prejudicing the rights of no one, such amendment may be allowed;[13] and, of course, mere clerical errors may be amended or corrected by the appellate court.[14]

(b) As to Pleadings

In a proper case the court of appeals may, in the interest of justice, allow amendments to correct errors in the pleadings.

Under the provisions of 28 U.S.C.A. § 777, the circuit court of appeals may, in its discretion, allow an amendment of the pleadings on appeal;[15] and such an amendment has been allowed where the errors in the pleadings corrected thereby were merely formal errors which did not affect substantial rights or advance new issues.[16] An amendment of the pleadings, however, will not be allowed on appeal where there are no apparent equities sufficiently strong to justify it,[17] where it would change the whole cause of action,[18] or where the record is devoid of any proof to sustain an omitted allegation sought to be supplied by the amendment.[19]

To conform to evidence, verdict, or judgment. Where the record so warrants, the court of appeals, on a proper showing, may allow an amendment of the pleadings so as to make them conform to the proofs,[20] the verdict,[21] and the judgment.[22]

To show jurisdiction. Under the Act of March 3, 1915, 28 U.S.C.A. § 399, jurisdictional averments of diverse citizenship, actually existing but defectively alleged, are amendable "at any stage of the proceedings and in the appellate court upon such

11. Existence of judicial decree
Appellant held estopped to assert that decree appealed from was not a decree of the court.—The Rethalulew, Official No. 227860, C.C.A.Cal., 51 F.2d 646.
Sufficiency of findings
Plaintiff in error cannot challenge the sufficiency of the special findings, under Rev.St. § 649, Comp.St. § 1587, where, without such findings, no question would be presented within the authority of the court to review.—Mayes v. Paul Jones & Co., C.C.A. Ky., 270 F. 121, affirming, D.C., Paul Jones & Co. v. Mayes, 265 F. 365.

12. Transferring cause to equity docket
Where trial court should have sustained motion, at close of evidence, to transfer action to equity docket and case was fully tried, appellate court had power and duty to make transfer and, having done so, to consider proceeding as one in equity.—Jack v. Forrest, C.C.A.Utah, 71 F.2d 264, certiorari granted Forrest v. Jack, 55 S.Ct. 95, 293 U.S. 542, 79 L.Ed. 647, reversed on other grounds 55 S.Ct. 370, 294 U.S. 158, 79 L.Ed. 829, 96 A.L.R. 1457, rehearing denied 55 S.Ct. 543, 294 U.S. 733, 79 L.Ed. 1262.

13. U.S.—Elder v. Western Mining Co., C.C.A.Colo., 280 F. 569—U. S. v. Hopewell, Mass., 51 F. 798, 2 C.C.A. 510.
4 C.J. p 724 note 98.

14. U.S.—Seeley v. Hunt, C.C.A.Tex., 109 F.2d 595, certiorari denied Hunt v. Seeley, 60 S.Ct. 894, 309 U.S. 690, 84 L.Ed. 1033.

15. U.S.—Jeffreys v. O'Neal, C.C.A. N.C., 64 F.2d 284—Page v. Natural Gas & Fuel Co., C.C.A.Ark., 35 F. 2d 462—Keaton v. Little, C.C.A. Okl., 34 F.2d 396, reversing Dykes v. Little, 31 F.2d 742.
4 C.J. p 723 note 88.
Amendments regarded as made see infra subdivision e (4) (b) of this section.

16. Discretion liberally exercised
Discretion to amend complaint on appeal should be liberally exercised to meet technical objection.—Jeffreys v. O'Neal, C.C.A.N.C., 64 F.2d 284.

17. U.S.—Post v. Beacon Vacuum Pump & Electrical Co., Me., 89 F. 1, 32 C.C.A. 151.

18. U.S.—Glenn v. W. C. Mitchell Co., C.C.A.N.D., 282 F. 440, modified on other grounds 285 F. 381.

19. U.S.—Youngs Rubber Corporation v. C. I. Lee & Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 45 F.2d 103.

20. U.S.—Schmidt v. U. S., C.C.A. Neb., 63 F.2d 390—Youngs Rubber Corporation v. C. I. Lee & Co., C.C. A.N.Y., 45 F.2d 103.

21. Amendment refused
Where instructions allowed finding for plaintiff on count of indebitatus assumpsit, although such recovery was not warranted by evidence, it was held that plaintiff should not be allowed on appeal to file, as amendment, declaration in special assumpsit, and have affirmance of judgment on theory that verdict was based on count in quantum meruit.—American Locomotive Co. v. Harris, R.I., 239 F. 234, 152 C.C.A. 222.

22. Amendment refused
Where the complaint sought to recover judgment against defendant as surviving partner, but default judgment was rendered against him individually and as surviving partner, plaintiff cannot amend to conform to the judgment, on an appeal by defendant, following the court's refusal to open the default judgment.—Glenn v. W. C. Mitchell Co., C.C.A.N.D., 282 F. 440, modified on other grounds 285 F. 381.

terms as the court may impose, so as to show on the record such diverse citizenship and jurisdiction."[23] Amendments in the court of appeals to cure defects arising from the absence or insufficiency of jurisdictional averments as to the amount in controversy, however, have been denied in a number of cases,[24] particularly where the application for leave to amend was not made in good faith.[25]

(2) Additional Proofs

Generally additional proofs cannot be supplied in the court of appeals.

As a general rule defects in proofs cannot be supplied in the court of appeals and that court cannot hear additional proofs[26] or receive or accept affidavits;[27] and this is particularly true where the court below would itself be powerless to receive such additional proofs.[28] It has been held, however, that the court of appeals may avail itself of authentic evidence outside the record before it of matters occurring since the decree of the trial court, when such course is necessary to prevent a miscarriage of justice, to avoid a useless circuity of proceeding, to preserve a jurisdiction lawfully acquired, or to protect itself from imposition or further prosecution of litigation where the controversy between the parties has been settled or for other reasons has ceased to exist.[29]

(3) Trial de Novo
(a) In general
(b) Equitable proceedings

(a) In General

A trial de novo is a new trial in an appellate tribunal.

A trial de novo means a trial anew in an appellate tribunal, according to the usual or prescribed mode of procedure in other cases, involving similar questions, whether of law or of fact.[30]

(b) Equitable Proceedings

On appeal, chancery cases are tried de novo on the entire record.

On appeal to the circuit court of appeals, chancery cases are tried de novo on the entire record and the evidence.[31] They are tried in the appellate court on the same evidence that was before the 25 C.J. p 780 note 17 [a].

Construction and application of statute

(1) Omission from a complaint of allegation of plaintiff's citizenship was held cured for jurisdictional purposes by his testimony as to his citizenship, brought out on his cross-examination by defendant and uncontradicted, the complaint being amendable by adding such allegation, at any stage of the proceedings, and in the appellate court, under the statute.—Cunard S. S. Co. v. Sullivan, C.C.A.N.Y., 6 F.2d 383.

(2) An amendment of the pleadings on appeal to show diversity of citizenship will not be allowed where there is nothing in the record warranting such an amendment.—Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. v. Wilson, C.C.A.Cal., 81 F.2d 657—Utah Radio Products Co. v. Boudette, C.C.A.Mass., 78 F.2d 793.

(3) Where party who, respecting federal jurisdiction based on diverse citizenship, is improperly joined, is not indispensable, jurisdictional defect may not be cured by motion in appellate court to amend and dismiss as to him.—Levering & Garrigues Co. v. Morrin, C.C.A.N.Y., 61 F.2d 115, certiorari granted 53 S.Ct. 118, 287 U.S. 590, 77 L.Ed. 515, affirmed 53 S.Ct. 549, 289 U.S. 103, 77 L.Ed. 1062.

Practice prior to statute

Prior to the enactment of 28 U.S.C.A. § 399, amendments on appeal to show diversity of citizenship were denied in a number of cases.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Newcom, Ark., 56 F. 951, 6 C.C.A. 172—25 C.J. p. 780 notes 13, 15.

24. Record not showing amount

Where there was nothing in the record to show the amount involved, an application to amend on appeal was denied.—Utah Radio Products Co. v. Boudette, C.C.A.Mass., 78 F.2d 793.

Amendment refused on appeal to circuit court

On appeal from interlocutory order

While, on an appeal from an order granting a preliminary injunction, in a suit for infringement of a patent and copyrights and for unfair competition, the cause might be dismissed, if it clearly appeared that no ground existed for equitable relief, the court of appeals could not render a final decree for complainant on ex parte affidavits and decrees of other courts in a suit by the same plaintiff against the party whose goods defendant was charged with selling.—Meccano, Limited, v. John Wanamaker, New York, N.Y., 40 S. Ct. 463, 253 U.S. 136, 64 L.Ed. 822, affirming 250 F. 450, 162 C.C.A. 520, reversing, D.C., 241 F. 133, and certiorari denied 39 S.Ct. 495, 250 U.S. 647, 63 L.Ed. 1188, granted 39 S.Ct. 10, 248 U.S. 554, 63 L.Ed. 419.

28. After expiration of term

No error appearing justifying modification or reversal, circuit court of appeals cannot take further proof which trial court would be powerless to receive because term has ended, and, on basis of such proof, reverse or modify.—Realty Acceptance Corporation v. Montgomery, Del., 52 S.Ct. 215, 284 U.S. 547, 76 L.Ed. 476, affirming, C.C.A., Montgomery v. Realty Acceptance Corporation, 51 F.2d 642, certiorari granted Realty Acceptance Corporation v. Montgomery, 52 S.Ct. 25, 284 U.S. 604, 76 L.Ed. 518.

lower court,[32] since the court of appeals cannot take additional evidence,[33] and hence the trial on appeal is not de novo in the sense that new or additional evidence may be received on appeal.[34]

Scope of inquiry. An appeal in equity brings up for review the whole case [35] with certain inferences in favor of the decree below.[36] On such an appeal, the court of appeals, where the entire record including the evidence is before it, may review the evidence [37] and its sufficiency to support the findings and judgment of the court below,[38] draw inferences of fact,[39] and determine the cause on the merits even though the merits were not considered below.[40] While the appellate court is not bound by the findings of the court below,[41] usually such findings should be accepted by it unless they disclose a serious mistake in estimating the evidence,[42] as due weight should be given to the advantage of the trial judge in seeing the witnesses, hearing their testimony, and noting their demeanor on the stand and their candor or want of candor.[43]

Errors committed by the court below, which could have no effect on the court of appeals in determining the rights of the parties on a trial de novo, are immaterial and will not be considered.[44] Of this character are errors in the admission of evidence.[45]

From the record before it, the court of appeals will make such disposition of the cause as accords with equity and good conscience;[46] and accordingly the decree below will be sustained if it was right for any reason.[47]

(1) In General

All reasonable presumptions are indulged in favor of the judgment below and against error; and the burden of affirmatively showing error is on appellant.

It is a general rule of wide application that the circuit court of appeals will indulge all reasonable presumptions in favor of the correctness of the judgment, order, or decree from which the appeal was taken.[48] Indeed error is never presumed on appeal,[49] and will not be inferred from a doubtful statement in the record,[50] but must be affirmatively shown by the record;[51] and the burden of so showing it is on appellant.[52]

Presumptions favorable to the judgment, order, or decree appealed from are properly indulged in a case where the record on appeal is abbreviated, defective, imperfect, or incomplete,[53] as where the appeal is on the judgment roll alone.[54] Thus, where the determination of a question presented for review depends on evidence, and the record on appeal does not show or purport to show all the evidence pertaining to it in the manner required by the practice, it will be presumed that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the ruling or the action of the court.[55] Indeed, evidence omitted from the record will be presumed to be adverse to appellant.[56]

So also, on a partial or incomplete record, the court of appeals will presume any conceivable state of facts within the scope of the pleadings and not inconsistent with the record which will sustain and support the ruling or decision complained of;[57] but it will not, for the purpose of finding reversible error, presume the existence of facts as to which the record is silent.[58] Thus, in support of the ruling or decision complained of, it will be presumed on appeal, as to matters not fully disclosed by the record, that a private corporation acted regularly and within its corporate powers,[59] that parties acted in good faith,[60] that public officers performed their duties,[61] that administrative officers acted regularly and in an authorized manner,[62] that the lower court had power to sell particular assets,[63] that statutory requirements were complied with,[64] and that the court below had judicial knowledge of certain facts.[65] So presumptions will be indulged in an appropriate case as to the validity and effectiveness of legislative enactments;[66] the execution,[67] contents,[68] nature, and effect[69] of papers, documents, and written instruments; and other matters.[70]

67. Place of execution

Where record was silent as to place of execution or performance of loan agreements between commodity credit corporation and cotton producers, circuit court of appeals could assume that agreements were executed where the producers resided.—Commodity Credit Corporation v. Contents of summary of evidence

Where order of district judge recited his consideration of a summary of the evidence, but no summary was sent to appellate court, except so far as contained in referee's findings of fact and conclusions of law, and neither party referred to it or asked to have it sent up, it will be assumed that, if there was a separate summary, it contained substantially no more than as shown by referee's findings.—Titus v. 69. U.S.—Schmid v. Alice Bank & Trust Co., C.C.A.Tex., 86 F.2d 590. 4 C.J. p 737 note 54.

70. Particular facts presumed on appeal

(1) That courts will not violate established rules of comity.—McCrew v. Stanolind Oil & Gas Co., C.C.A. Tex., 80 F.2d 273.

(2) That fees involved in the litigation were not fees which had been abolished by statute.—Carriso, Inc. v. U. S., C.C.A.Cal., 106 F.2d 707.

(3) That one of the parties was not connected with the illegal transportation of liquor.—Shawnee Nat. Bank v. U. S., Okl., 249 F. 583, 161 C.C.A. 509.

(4) That a vendor was ready, willing, and able to perform his obligations under a contract for the sale of real estate.—Barrett v. Gay, C.C.A. Miss., 25 F.2d 565.

(5) That insurer, instituting interpleader proceedings, deposited in court all that was due on policy.—Cramer v. Phœnix Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., C.C.A.Iowa, 91 F.2d 141, affirming, D.C., Phœnix Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., v. Lafferty, 16 F.Supp. 740.

(6) That a tax commission correctly determined the value of property assessed.—Adams County v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., C.C.A.Wash., 115 F.2d 768.

(7) That private property would not be unlawfully taken.—U. S. v. Winkle Terra Cotta, C.C.A.Mo., 110 F.2d 919.

(8) That a state court would not act without giving parties to proceedings therein an opportunity to be heard.—Axelrod v. Osage Oil & Refining Co., C.C.A.Okl., 29 F.2d 712.

(9) Other miscellaneous facts.—Kennedy v. U. S., C.C.A.Ariz., 119 F.2d 564—Jackson v. Quickslip Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 110 F.2d 731, affirming, D.C., 27 F.Supp. 338—Field v. Waterman S. S. Corporation, C.C.A.Ala., 104

Conversely, it will not be presumed on appeal that a personal representative will violate his duties,[71] or that a state court would place on a state statute a construction making it invalid where it was reasonably susceptible of a construction under which it would be valid.[72]

Exercise of discretion. Where the trial court made an order which was within its discretion to grant or refuse, there is a strong presumption that the power of discretion was exercised.[73] To overcome this presumption the record must affirmatively show that the order was granted because of an erroneous conclusion that the court was without discretionary power to refuse it.[74]

Presumptions unwarranted by the record will not be indulged.[75]

(2) Organization and Jurisdiction of Lower Court

If nothing to the contrary appears, the court of appeals, in support of the judgment, usually will make every reasonable presumption in favor of the jurisdiction and organization of the court below.

Where the lower court has assumed jurisdiction of the cause and there is nothing in the record to indicate lack of jurisdiction, the circuit court of appeals will, to avoid reversal, indulge in every reasonable presumption in favor of the jurisdiction of the lower court,[76] and of its having properly found and determined that it had jurisdiction.[77] Indeed jurisdictional allegations in a pleading will be accepted as true by the appellate court where they were not denied or disproved in the lower court and that court made no inquiry into their truth and no express finding with reference thereto.[78]

Conversely, where the court below dismissed the action for want of jurisdiction, every reasonable presumption will be indulged, on appeal, in favor of the trial court's ruling,[79] particularly where the record on appeal is incomplete.[80]

Organization. If nothing to the contrary appears in the record, it will be presumed that the case was tried to a judge duly qualified to hold the court[81] and that he held the court within the district thereof.[82] Likewise, it will be assumed, in the absence of a contrary showing, that a stenographer who reported the trial was duly appointed where no point as to his status was made in the argument on appeal.[83]

(3) Parties and Process

The court of appeals generally will indulge all reasonable presumptions with respect to parties and process necessary to sustain the judgment of the lower court.

The court of appeals will generally indulge all reasonable presumptions with respect to parties, or rulings thereon, necessary to sustain the judgment of the lower court.[84]

74. U.S.—Pilot Life Ins. Co. v. Habis, supra.

75. Meaning of foreign law
Where translation of material foreign laws was either erroneous or incomplete, as introduced in evidence at trial, circuit court of appeals would not speculate concerning the correct meaning of the foreign laws. —Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Nester, C.C.A.Cal., 106 F.2d 587, affirming, D.C., Nester v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 25 F.Supp. 478, certiorari granted Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Jurisdictional amount
Where no objection is made that a bill does not show the requisite amount involved to give a federal court jurisdiction, and it contains allegations from which such amount may be inferred and could properly be alleged by amendment, the court of appeals may properly sustain the jurisdiction.—Williams v. Molther, N. Y., 198 F. 460, 117 C.C.A. 220, reversing, C.C., 189 F. 700.

77. Incomplete record
Where the evidence at the trial was not brought into the record, the court of appeals must assume that it was sufficient to support the trial court's decision that it had jurisdiction of defendant.—Bendix Home Appliances v. Radio Accessories Co., C.C.A.Neb., 129 F.2d 177.

80. Facts assumed to show lack of jurisdiction
Where, on an appeal from a judgment dismissing the action for want of jurisdiction, the record did not disclose whether the court reached its conclusion from the pleadings or evidence, and the record did not disclose the evidence on which the ruling might have been based, the circuit court of appeals must assume that facts were before the trial court which showed a lack of jurisdiction. —Sturhahn v. General Household Utilities Co., C.C.A.Ga., 92 F.2d 415.

84. Dismissal of parties
Where complainant by leave of court files an amended bill, from which he omits one of the parties made defendant in the original bill, it will be presumed on appeal, in the absence of an affirmative showing to the contrary, that leave was given to dismiss as to such party.—Hicklin v. Marco, Or., 56 F. 549, 6 C.C.A. 10.

(4) Pleadings
(a) In general
(b) Amendments regarded as made

(a) In General

In so far as necessary to sustain the judgment under review, the court of appeals will generally indulge all reasonable presumptions with reference to the pleadings, and in favor of the correctness of the trial court's rulings thereon.

If nothing to the contrary appears, the court of appeals will generally indulge all reasonable presumptions with respect to the pleadings,[86] and in favor of the correctness of rulings thereon,[87] which are necessary to sustain the judgment of the trial court. Thus, in the absence of a contrary showing, all reasonable presumptions will be made in support of the trial court's action in allowing an amendment to the pleadings;[88] and it will be assumed that, if objection had been made in the court below to the alleged insufficiency of a pleading, that court would have granted permission to amend.[89]

Where judgment has been rendered on the pleadings, the court of appeals will presume the facts to be as alleged by the unsuccessful party.[90]

Striking out or dismissal. In reviewing the ruling or decision of the trial court on a motion to strike[91] or on a motion to dismiss,[92] the circuit quired to assume that no order allowing defendant's motion to join additional parties was entered by district court where record failed to show entry of such order.—United Porto Rican Sugar Co. v. Del Toro, C.C.A.Puerto Rico, 80 F.2d 14.

Unreasonable presumptions with respect to parties will not be indulged.—Granzow v. Village of Lyons, C.C.A.Ill., 89 F.2d 83.

85. U.S.—Bendix Home Appliances v. Radio Accessories Co. C.C.A.Neb., 129 F.2d 177.

86. U.S.—Southern Ry. Co. v. Rhodes, Tenn., 86 F. 422, 30 C.C.A. 157.

Defense presumed properly pleaded

Where the district court entered a judgment for defendants on the pleadings on the ground of res judicata, although that defense was not pleaded in the affidavit of defense, and no point was made on writ of error of the failure to specifically plead it, the appellate court would assume that the defense was properly presented below.—Graff Furnace Co. v. Scranton Coal Co., C.C.A.Pa., 266 F. 798.

Noncompliance with rules not assumed

Where the record was silent on the point, the court of appeals could not assume that a rule of the trial court requiring pleadings to be printed before the cause was heard was not observed.—Leitch v. City of Chicago, C.C.A.Ill., 41 F.2d 728, certiorari denied 51 S.Ct. 106, 282 U.S. 891, 75 L.Ed. 786.

87. U.S.—A. C. Motor Freight Lines v. Shingledecker, C.C.A.Ind., 70 F.2d 827.

88. Where the evidence is not in the record, it will be presumed that the allowance of an amendment was properly made to permit the pleadings to conform to the proof.—A. C. Motor Freight Lines v. Shingledecker, C.C.A.Ind., 70 F.2d 827.

court of appeals will assume the truth of the well pleaded allegations in the pleading or portion of the pleading attacked, and that they could be established by proof;[93] and it will read such allegations in the light most favorable to the party pleading them[94] and will give him the benefit of all reasonable inferences arising therefrom.[95]

Demurrers. Prior to the abolition of demurrers, the general rule was that, in so far as necessary to sustain the judgment under review, the court of appeals would indulge all reasonable presumptions with reference to demurrers, and in favor of the correctness of the trial court's rulings thereon,[96] although the facts well pleaded in the pleading demurred to would be presumed on appeal to be true.[97]

(b) Amendments Regarded as Made

Necessary or desirable amendments to the pleadings not shown by the record to have been made will often be regarded by the circuit court of appeals as having been made.

For the purpose of sustaining the judgment under review, necessary or desirable amendments to the pleadings not shown by the record to have been made, and which should have been allowed if requested, will, in the furtherance of justice, often be regarded by the circuit court of appeals as having been made.[98] This is particularly true where the amendment relates to merely formal or technical matters[99] or where the case has been tried or treated in the lower court as though the pleading were sufficient or the amendment in fact made.[1] Thus, in the furtherance of justice, the appellate court may regard the pleadings as having been amended to conform to the proof[2] where no surprise or prejudice will result therefrom[3] and where the case was tried or treated in the lower court as though the is-

96. Demurrer sustained after abolition thereof by rule of court, but filed prior thereto, was assumed on appeal, in the absence of a contrary showing, to have been submitted before the effective date of the rule or treated as a motion to dismiss.—Weber v. Hertzell, Okl., 230 F. 965, 145 C.C.A. 159.

Demurrer presumed waived where the record on appeal did not show what action was taken thereon in the lower court, and the case was otherwise disposed of.—Southern Ry. Co. v. Rhodes, Tenn., 86 F. 422, 30 C.C.A. 157.

Harmless error not presumed
Where, after overruling of demurrer to a paragraph of the answer pleading a parol agreement varying the terms of the written contract of sale sued on, the case was tried and there was a general finding and judgment for defendant, the circuit court of appeals would not presume, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, that there was evidence on the trial to sustain any proper theory of defense admissible under any other part of the answer, so as to render the error in overruling the demurrer harmless. —Keystone Steel & Wire Co. v. sues not made or tendered by the pleadings were in fact pleaded.[4] The circuit court of appeals, however, will not regard an amendment of the pleadings as having been made where to do so would result in injustice[5] or in the reversal of a judgment otherwise correct.[6]

(5) Interlocutory Matters and Provisional Remedies

In the absence of a contrary showing, the court of appeals will make all reasonable presumptions in favor of the correctness of the lower court's orders with respect to interlocutory matters or provisional remedies.

Unless there is something in the record to show the contrary, the circuit court of appeals, when necessary to sustain the judgment being reviewed, will make all reasonable presumptions in favor of the correctness of the lower court's orders or rulings with respect to interlocutory matters or provisional remedies[7] and the regularity of the proceedings in connection therewith.[8] Accordingly, in the absence of a record showing which prevents it, the court of appeals will make all reasonable presumptions in favor of the action of the lower court in granting,[9] modifying, or dissolving[10] a preliminary injunction. On an appeal from a decree appointing, on the bill, a receiver for a corporation, however, the allegations of the bill must be taken as true.[11]

Bonds. Where the statute requires the filing of a bond as a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action, it will be presumed on appeal, the record being silent on the matter, that the trial court, in the exercise of its sound discretion, deemed the bond filed sufficient.[12]

(6) Reference

Generally, reasonable presumptions will be indulged on appeal to support proceedings under an order of reference.

Where the case was referred by the lower court, and the record does not show the contrary, it will be presumed, on appeal, that the referee, or officer to whom the matter was referred, acted within the scope of his powers;[13] that he faithfully discharged his duty;[14] that he complied with the statutory requirements;[15] and that he weighed all the evidence

Harvey, Kan., 216 F. 316, 132 C.C. A. 460.

Failure to object to pleadings or evidence

(1) The circuit court of appeals may regard the pleadings as amended to conform to the proofs where the sufficiency of the pleadings was not attacked in the lower court by motion or otherwise.—Balabanoff v. Kellogg, C.C.A.Alaska, 118 F.2d 597, certiorari denied 62 S.Ct. 69, 314 U. S. 635, 86 L.Ed. 510.

Under Fed.Rules of Civ.Proc., rule 15(b), 28 U.S.C.A. foll § 723c, when issues not raised by the pleadings are tried by express or implied consent of the parties, they will be treated in all respects as though they had been raised in the pleadings.—Hubshman v. Inconsistent recitals in pretrial order

Where there was disagreement on appeal as to scope of admissions by appellants recited in pretrial order, and such recitals were in a measure inconsistent, reviewing court did not attempt to resolve dispute concerning effect of the order, but for the most part gave appellants the benefit of the doubt.—Frank v. Giesy, C.C.A. Or., 117 F.2d 122.

8. Notice

It may be presumed, in the absence of a contrary showing in the record, that due notice was given.—Rector v. U. S., C.C.A.Okl., 20 F.2d 845—City and County of Denver v. Stenger, C.C.A.Colo., 295 F. 809.

10. Time of modification or vacation

On appeal from judgment granting preliminary injunction to protect jurisdiction of district court in action for distribution of trust fund, circuit court of appeals would assume that district court would modify the injunction or set it aside whenever it received sufficient assurance that trust fund would be kept intact and available.—Doyne v. Saettele, C.C.A. Mo., 112 F.2d 155.

properly received in reaching his conclusion.[16] So it will be presumed, in the absence of a contrary showing, that his report contains all the evidence taken before him where he was directed by the court to report the evidence,[17] but there is no such presumption where he was directed to report only his findings.[18]

Assent to reference. Where an order of reference did not show the presence of, or assent by, defendants, and the record threw no light on the subject, it would be assumed that they were not present when the order was made or, if present, did not assent thereto.[19]

(7) Conduct of Trial in General

In the absence of a contrary showing in the record, it will be presumed on appeal that the rulings of the trial court during the course of the trial were correct and that the trial was properly conducted.

Under the general rules considered supra subdivision e (1) of this section, the rulings of the trial court during the course and conduct of the trial will, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, be presumed to be correct,[20] and it will be presumed that the trial was conducted in a proper, regular, and orderly manner.[21] Accordingly, in the absence of a contrary showing in the record, the presumption on appeal is in favor of the propriety, and against the impropriety, of counsel's conduct;[22] and where the record does not show that remarks of the court were objected to and does not contain the instructions, it will be assumed that error, if any, was cured by the instructions.[23]

(8) Admissibility and Reception of Evidence

In order to sustain the judgment or decree entered below, all reasonable presumptions are indulged with respect to the admissibility and reception of evidence.

When the record is silent on the point, it will be presumed that evidence was adduced to support the court's finding and judgment;[24] and it will not be assumed that the trial court followed any improper course of procedure in taking the evidence.[25] So where the record does not indicate that appellant objected to the trial court's action in treating a certain instrument as evidence, it is to be inferred that such treatment was acquiesced in by appellant.[26]

Admissibility and rulings thereon. In the absence of a contrary showing, the trial court is ordinarily presumed, on appeal, to have ruled correctly on the admissibility of evidence.[27] Thus, where evidence requiring a foundation was admitted, it will be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that a proper foundation was laid;[28] and where ev-

Remarks of court

Court of appeals, in absence of showing in bill of exceptions, could not assume that remark of judge respecting record was equivalent to certificate that plaintiff had made a certain admission.—Brown v. Carver, C.C.A.N.Y., 45 F.2d 673.

22. Informing jury as to insurance or indemnity

Where it is improper to adduce evidence on the trial or hearing of a tort action which informs the jury that the loss will fall on an insurance company, and plaintiff's counsel propounds a question which calls for proper evidence and the witness in his answer includes a reference to insurance, the good faith of counsel will be presumed; but if the record affirmatively shows that there was no excuse for injecting the suggestion that insurance coverage existed, bad faith will be presumed.—Pillsbury Flour Mills Co. v. Miller, C.C.A.Mo., 121 F.2d 297.

26. U.S.—Pensacola Shipping Co. v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, C.C.A.Fla., 277 F. 889.

27. Absence of exceptions to rulings

Prior to the adoption of Fed.Rules of Civ.Proc., rule 46, 28 U.S.C.A. foll § 723c, dispensing with the necessity for formal exceptions, see § 292b (3) supra, it was held that where no exception to any ruling of the trial court on admission or rejection of evidence was shown to have been taken, the appellate court would assume that all evidence offered was properly admitted and that no proper evidence was rejected.—McCampbell v. New York Life Ins. Co., C.C.A. Tex., 288 F. 465, certiorari denied 43 S.Ct. 705, 262 U.S. 759, 67 L.Ed. 1219.

Grounds of admissibility

Where defendant's counsel, in effort to have hospital records admitted in evidence in district court, referred to statutory authority concerning admission in evidence of public records of the United States, and a second statute was controlling as to admissibility of records, on defendant's appeal, circuit court of appeals would treat defendant's claims regarding admissibility of records as being made on basis of second statute.—Ulm v. Moore-McCormack Lines, C.C.A.N.Y., 115 F.2d 492, rehearing denied 117 F.2d 222, certiorari denied 61 S.Ct. 941, 313 U.S. 567, 85 L.Ed. 1525.

28. Hearsay

Presumption exists that trial court correctly decided whether circumstances under which statement, sought to be introduced as exception to hearsay rule, was made, were

idence was excluded on a general objection, if any ground in fact existed for its exclusion, it will be assumed, in the absence of any request for a more specific objection, that the ruling was placed on the right ground.[29]

Where evidence was excluded and the record contains the offer of proof, the court of appeals will assume that the proof could have been made,[30] and it will treat the assumed facts as established[31]

Competency and examination of witnesses. Where no objection was raised at the trial as to the competency of a witness offered as an expert, it will be assumed that he sufficiently qualified as an expert;[32] and, in the absence of a contrary showing, it will be presumed that questions asked him were proper in form and subject matter.[33]

(9) Dismissal, Nonsuit, and Direction of Verdict

(a) Dismissal
(b) Nonsuit
(c) Direction of verdict

(a) Dismissal

In the absence of a contrary showing, it will be presumed that the proceedings to obtain a dismissal, if granted, were regular, although on a dismissal for insufficiency of evidence, the evidence will be viewed in the light most favorable to the unsuccessful party.

It will be presumed in support of a judgment or decree of dismissal, in the absence of a contrary showing, that the proceedings to obtain it were regular[34] and that the court acted properly[35] and on lawful grounds.[36] In other words, the burden is on appellant to show that the judgment or decree of dismissal was erroneously entered,[37] and, where the record does not show the ground of a judgment of dismissal, there is no presumption against the correctness of the judgment.[38]

Dismissal on pleadings. As has been seen supra subdivision e (4) (a) of this section, where the judgment of dismissal is entered on the pleadings the circuit court of appeals, on appeal, must assume the truth of the allegations thereof.

Dismissal for want of prosecution. In a proper case it may be presumed that a dismissal for want of prosecution was on the merits.[39]

Where an order of dismissal is the equivalent of a directed verdict, the court of appeals, on reviewing such order, must view the evidence[40] and all inferences reasonably to be drawn therefrom[41] in the light most favorable to the party whose complaint or counterclaim, as the case may be, is dismissed by the order.

33. Question assumed to include definition

Where competency of testimony of physicians was not raised, and narrative record did not reflect whether questions to all physicians respecting total and permanent disability included definition of the term, but showed that such definition was included in question propounded to one physician, appellate court should assume that questions to the other physicians contained like definition.—U. S. v. Bowman, C.C.A.Utah, 73 F.2d 716.

Improper action not presumed

36. U.S.—Hawke v. Servicised Products Corporation, C.C.A.Ohio, 95 F. 2d 710, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 592, 306 U.S. 650, 83 L.Ed. 1049.

38. Waiver of available defense not presumed

Defense of prematurity being available under motion to dismiss, appellate court will not presume it was waived where record did not show ground on which court sustained motion to dismiss.—Oregon-Washington Water Service Co. v. City of Hoquiam, C.C.A.Wash., 29 F. 2d 566, amending and denying rehearing 28 F.2d 576.

39. Rules of Civil Procedure assumed applicable

The district court's dismissal of equity suit for want of prosecution was on merits, in absence of contrary provision in order of dismissal, under Fed.Rules of Civ.Proc. rule 41(b), 28 U.S.C.A. foll. § 723c, which circuit court of appeals will assume to be applicable, where record shows no determination by judge who made order that application of such rules would not be feasible or would work injustice.—Carnegie Nat. Bank v. City of Wolf Point, C.C.A.Mont., 110 F.2d 569.

Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 261 F. 854.

41. U.S.—Federal Deposit Ins. Cor-

(b) Nonsuit

Generally on an appeal from a nonsuit, or refusal thereof, the evidence must be viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff.

Generally on appeal from a judgment of nonsuit the evidence must be considered in the light most favorable to plaintiff.[42] Accordingly he is entitled to the most favorable inferences deducible from the evidence[43] and to the rejection of the unfavorable ones;[44] and the evidence in his favor is regarded as true.[45]

Likewise, in reviewing a refusal of the lower court to grant a nonsuit, the circuit court of appeals will view the evidence in the aspect most favorable to plaintiff.[46]

Where, however, the record is not complete, the presumption is in favor of the correctness of the lower court's ruling on a motion for a nonsuit.[47]

(c) Direction of Verdict

On appeal from a directed verdict, or a refusal to direct, the evidence, as a general rule, is considered in the aspect most favorable to the adverse party, although, where the record is incomplete, the trial court's decision is presumed correct.

As a general rule, in passing on the question whether the lower court should or should not have directed a verdict for one party, the circuit court of appeals must consider the evidence in the light most favorable to the adverse party.[48] Accordingly, where a verdict was directed, the appellate court must take that view of the evidence which is most favorable to the party against whom the verdict was directed,[49] applying all favorable inferences

Evidence presumed to warrant nonsuit
Where record does not disclose evidence before trial court at time nonsuit was granted, presumption exists that evidence warranted order of nonsuit.—Dulion v. S. A. Lynch Enterprise Finance Corporation, C.C. A.Ga., 53 F.2d 568, 82 A.L.R. 509, certiorari denied 52 S.Ct. 312, 285 U.S. 540, 76 L.Ed. 933.

arising therefrom,[50] and disregarding evidence favorable to the successful party.[51] Moreover, the unsuccessful party's evidence will be accepted as true[52] and given its greatest force,[53] and all conflicts in the evidence will be resolved in his favor.[54] The court of appeals, however, may safely assume, where a verdict was directed for defendant, that plaintiff's case was not helped out by an impressive atmosphere in the trial court not shown in the record.[55]

Refusal of directed verdict. That view of the evidence most favorable to the party against whom a directed verdict was asked must be taken by the circuit court of appeals on review of the denial of a motion to direct a verdict,[56] whether for plaintiff[57] or for defendant.[58] Accordingly, on appeal

Where both parties sought directed verdict

(1) Prior to the adoption of Fed. Rules of Civ. Proc., rule 50(a), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, which changed the former federal rule with respect to the waiver of a trial by jury where both parties moved for a directed verdict, it was held that, where both parties moved unqualifiedly for a directed verdict, and the court directed a verdict or found for plaintiff, the circuit court of appeals, on review, would view the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff.—U. (2) In such a case the reviewing court would accept plaintiff's uncontradicted evidence as true.—Hansen & Rowland v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, C.C.A.Wash., 72 F.2d 151.

(3) Defendant had the burden, on appeal, of showing that there was no evidence to support the verdict directed for plaintiff.—Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Wilcox Co., C.C.A.Ill., 68 F.2d 883.

the evidence favorable to the party against whom the directed verdict was asked will be accepted as true;[59] evidence unfavorable to him will not be considered;[60] and all legitimate inferences will be indulged in his favor from the evidence supporting his side of the case.[61]

Where a verdict was directed on the opening statement of counsel of one of the parties, it will be presumed, on appeal, that all facts stated in the opening,[62] together with all the facts inferable therefrom,[63] would have been proved had the case been tried; and, in case the verdict was directed for defendant, all proper inferences will be drawn in support of the petition and plaintiff's statement.[64]

Verdict directed on particular issue. Where a verdict was directed because of insufficiency of evidence to support a finding on a particular issue, it may be assumed that a case was made for the jury

on the other issues.[65]

Incomplete record. In the absence of a showing to the contrary, where the record does not contain all the evidence, presumptions obtain favoring the sufficiency of the evidential support and the correctness of the lower court's decision on the question of directing a verdict.[66]

Inference on inference. While the party against whom a verdict was directed, or against whom a directed verdict was sought, is entitled to the benefit of all proper inferences that may be drawn from the evidentiary facts, as has been seen above, it is not legally correct on appeal to base one legal inference on another or one presumption on another.[67]

(10) Instructions

In the absence of a contrary showing, the circuit court of appeals will generally indulge all reasonable presumptions in favor of the propriety and sufficiency of instructions given and in favor of the correctness of rulings on requests for instructions.

For the purpose of sustaining the judgment under review, the circuit court of appeals, in the absence of a contrary showing, will generally indulge all reasonable presumptions and intendments in favor of the sufficiency and propriety of the instructions given to the jury by the lower court.[68] This is particularly true where no special instructions were requested,[69] no objections or exceptions were taken to the instructions given,[70] or where no specific error was assigned[71] or complaint otherwise made as to the charge or instructions.[72] Accordingly, error in the giving of instructions is never presumed on appeal[73] but must be affirmatively shown by the record.[74]

Requests and rulings thereon. As a general rule, if there is nothing shown to the contrary, the circuit court of appeals will make all reasonable presumptions in favor of the correctness of the trial court's rulings on requested instructions.[75] It is not to be assumed that the trial court will refuse to give proper charges;[76] and where a requested instruction was considered and refused by the trial court it will be presumed that the trial judge waived a rule of court, if violated, relating to the method of presenting requests for instructions.[77] So it will be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 51, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, requiring the trial court, prior to arguments to the jury, to inform counsel of its proposed action on written requests for charges were complied with.[78]

Where the record does not contain the evidence, it will be presumed that instructions given[79] and

79. Where "the record does not contain the evidence . . . the presumption obtains that the charge of the court was correct and was responsive to the issue as developed by the evidence as well as by the rulings on requested instructions[80] were correct and appropriate to the case as presented by the evidence.

If the instructions do not appear in the record, it will be presumed by the court of appeals that proper and full instructions[81] sufficiently favorable to appellant[82] were given; and this is particularly true where no exceptions were taken to the charge or instructions given.[83] So, in the absence of the entire charge, it may be presumed that the jury were properly and correctly instructed[84] and that error, if any, in the instructions before the appellate court was cured by other instructions not before the court.[85]

In support of the refusal of requested instructions which correctly stated the law and might properly have been given, it will be presumed by the appellate court that the substance of such requests was contained in other instructions that were given, where the record does not contain all the instructions given by the trial court,[86] or where it does not show that the instructions contained therein are all the instructions given by the court.[87]

(11) Custody and Conduct of Jury

In the absence of a contrary showing, it will be presumed on appeal that the officer in charge of the jury was properly instructed and performed his duties.

It will be presumed on appeal, in the absence of a contrary showing, that the officer in charge of the jury was instructed as to his duties in the manner prescribed by statute,[88] that he performed his duties,[89] and, as appears in the following subdivision of this section, that the jurors, in reaching their verdict, properly applied and followed the instructions of the court.

(12) Verdict

If there is nothing to show to the contrary, the court of appeals will generally indulge in all reasonable presumptions in favor of the correctness of the verdict.

In the absence of a contrary showing, the circuit court of appeals will usually indulge in all reasonable presumptions in favor of the correctness of the verdict.[90] Thus it will be presumed, in the absence of a contrary showing, that the verdict is in accord with the law,[91] that the jurors, in reaching the verdict, acted on evidence and not without it,[92] that they considered all of the duly admitted evidence,[93] and that they properly understood,[94] applied, and followed[95] the instructions and admonitions of the court.

Particular instructions presumed followed

(1) Instruction to disregard improper remarks of counsel.—U. S. v. Nickerson, C.C.A.Mass., 2 F.2d 502.

Matters decided. If there is nothing to show to the contrary, the court of appeals will usually presume that every fact necessary to support the verdict has been found by the jury in favor of the prevailing party.[96]

Evidence in support of verdict. In the absence of a contrary showing, it will generally be presumed on appeal that the verdict is supported by sufficient evidence;[97] and this is particularly true where the evidence received on the trial has not been duly preserved and presented to the appellate court[98] in its entirety.[99]

Where the evidence has been duly preserved and presented to the appellate court, that court, on reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, will view the evidence in the light most favorable to the party for whom the verdict was rendered,[1] accepting as true the evidence in his fa-

(2) Instruction to disregard certain improper evidence.—Graf v. Holcombe, C.C.A.Neb., 277 F. 687.

Conversely, it will not be assumed on appeal that the jury disregarded or disobeyed the instructions given.—Wock v. Wheeling & L. E. Ry. Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 61 F.2d 674—Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. v. Sieg, C.C.A.Ohio, 53 F.2d 318—American Ry. Express Co. v. Crabtree, C.C.A.Ky., 271 F. 287.

Action of trial judge

Particular facts

(1) The court of appeals must assume that jury found life insurance policy was delivered, where question of delivery was for jury, who found for beneficiary.—Inter-Southern Life Ins. Co. v. McElroy, C.C.A.Ark., 38 F.2d 557.

(2) Finding that actual cash value of property did not exceed insurance was implied, where jury returned verdict for full amount of policies making insured coinsurer if property was not insured to full value.—St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Eldracher, C.C.A.Mo., 33 F.2d 675, certiorari denied 50 S.Ct. 86, 280 U.S. 604, 74 L.Ed. 649.

Action by witness not reproduced

Jury's finding that gesture by defendant's driver toward plaintiff's child was so threatening as to amount to negligence will be presumed to be supported by evidence, witness having illustrated gesture, which could not be reproduced in the record.—Fell Brewing Co. v. Adamo, Pa., 245 F. 935, 158 C.C.A. 223.

Facts assumed to have been established

All facts that the prevailing party's evidence reasonably tends to prove must be assumed to have been established.—U. S. v. Holland, C.C.A. Cal., 111 F.2d 949—Walkup v. Jury's belief of evidence

(1) The court of appeals, in case of conflict in testimony, must assume that jury disbelieved witnesses whose testimony conflicted with verdict and believed those whose testimony supported verdict.—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Wilson, C.C.A. Ark., 52 F.2d 66—Ford Motor Co. v. Pearson, C.C.A.Wash., 40 F.2d 858.

Making of admission

able to him will generally be disregarded.[5]

Theory or grounds of verdict. If the contrary does not appear, it will be presumed that a general verdict was based on that theory or ground supported by the evidence which properly sustains the verdict;[6] and it will not be assumed that the verdict was based on a finding without evidence to support it.[7] Accordingly, where the pleadings raised two issues, and on the trial only one was supported by evidence, a favorable verdict will be sustained on appeal on the presumption that the jury based its verdict on the issue supported by the evidence.[8]

Refusal to submit particular issue. Where the evidence is before it, the court of appeals, in determining whether the lower court erred in refusing to submit an issue on the ground that it was not raised by the evidence, will consider the evidence in the light most favorable to the party requesting submission of the issue.[9]

(a) By Court

The general presumption is in favor of the correctness of the lower court's findings of fact and conclusions.

Charging two acts of negligence

Where, in an action to recover for loss of property by fire, defendant was charged with two acts of negligence, one of which would render it liable for the entire loss, and the other for only part of the loss, as the jury were instructed, and the verdict was for a sum much less than the entire loss, as shown by the evidence but approximately the amount claimed under the second cause of action, it must be presumed to have been based on that cause alone.—Pennsylvania Co. v. Conversely, the court of appeals, in the absence of a contrary showing, cannot presume that the trial court's conclusion on a question of fact was wrong.—Cornelison v. Fitch, C.C.A.Iowa, 91 F.2d 5.

dence is conflicting[11] and consists of the testimony of witnesses taken in open court,[12] as distinguished from documentary evidence or depositions.[13] Indeed there is an unusually strong presumption in favor of the trial court's findings where the record on appeal is confusing and inadequate.[14] Thus where none[15] or only a part[16] of the pertinent evidence is brought up on appeal, it must be assumed that the facts as found were true and correct.

In the absence of any contrary showing in the record, the trial court's finding of facts carries the presumption that the trial court received evidence on which to base the finding,[17] without any objection as to form or substance of the complaint or as to variance between pleading and proof.[18]

Requests for findings. In the absence of a contrary showing, the court of appeals will assume that the trial judge's refusal to make certain requested findings of fact was based on the view which he took of the evidence.[19]

Evidence considered by trial court. It will be presumed, on appeal, in a case tried by the court without a jury that the court, in arriving at its findings, took into consideration all the evidence that was properly admitted.[20] So, also, in the absence of an affirmative showing to the contrary,[21] it will be presumed that the trial court considered only proper and competent evidence and disregarded that which was incompetent or erroneously admitted;[22] and it will not be presumed that the court gave weight to improper evidence[23] which it indicated ought not to be considered.[24]

20. Exhibits in evidence are presumed to have been considered by trial court.—Lahman v. Burnes Nat. Bank of St. Joseph, Mo., C.C.A.Neb., 20 F.2d 897.

It will be assumed that the trial court in making its findings did not believe the evidence offered by the unsuccessful party in so far as it conflicted with the findings made.[25]

Sufficiency of evidence to support findings. As a general rule, the findings of the trial court will be presumed, on appeal, to be sustained by the evidence.[26] This is particularly true where the evidence is not included in the record on appeal,[27] or is not properly presented to the appellate court,[28] or where the record does not show that all the material evidence adduced at the trial is before the appellate court.[29]

In reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence, where it is in the record, to sustain the findings, the court of appeals will view the evidence in the light most favorable to the prevailing party[30] and will draw every inference fairly deducible from the evidence in favor of the findings,[31] the burden being on the unsuccessful party to show that the evidence compelled a finding in his favor.[32]

Implied findings. Where the record does not contain express findings of all material facts involved in the case, it will be presumed, on appeal, that the lower court found, in favor of the prevailing party, all the facts necessary for the support of the judgment.[33] So where there is only a general finding, all questions of fact are presumed to have been resolved in favor of the prevailing party;[34] and where, from the facts found, other facts which will support the judgment may be inferred, such inference will be presumed, on appeal, to have been made by the trial court.[35]

In accordance with the provisions of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 49 (a), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, if the trial court, in submitting special questions to the jury in a case submitted for a special verdict, omits any issue of fact raised by the pleadings or evidence and as to such issue fails to make a finding when he is authorized to do so, it will be assumed on appeal that the court made a finding on such issue in accordance with the judgment entered on the special verdict.[36]

Interpretation of findings. The court on appeal will, if possible, in interpreting the findings of fact, indulge in such presumptions as will make them support the judgment.[37]

Conclusions of law. In the absence of a contrary showing, the circuit court of appeals will generally presume that the lower court's conclusions of law were right;[38] and, where the evidence is not brought up on appeal, it will be presumed that they were supported by the evidence.[39]

(b) By Master

The general presumption on appeal is in favor of the correctness of the findings and conclusions of a master concurred in by the trial court.

As a general rule, findings made by a master[40] on oral[41] and conflicting[42] evidence and concurred in by the trial court[43] are regarded on appeal as presumptively correct, unless the appellate court is fully satisfied that error has been committed.[44] Accordingly it will be presumed on appeal that a master's findings of fact approved by the trial court are sustained by the evidence where the record contains no statement of the evidence.[45] Indeed, the findings of a master on oral,[46] as distinguished from

Reason for rule

Where a special master appointed to determine the validity of an assignment of patents and the trial court disagreed, since the master had superior opportunity to appraise credibility of witnesses, his findings based on oral testimony were presumptively correct.—General Kon-

documentary,[47] evidence are regarded on appeal as presumptively correct even where the trial court's findings are in conflict with those of the master who saw and heard the witnesses; but the strength of this presumption is measurably weakened by the contrary finding of the trial court,[48] particularly where the master's findings are based wholly on inferences whose reasonableness could be as fairly determined by the court as by him.[49]

The burden of showing error with respect to findings of a master rests on the party attacking them.[50]

Conclusions. Where the conclusions of the master from the facts found are approved by the trial court, every reasonable presumption will be indulged in their favor on appeal.[51]

(14) Amount of Recovery

The general presumption on appeal is in favor of the correctness of the amount of recovery.

The general presumption, on appeal, is in favor of the correctness of the amount of the recovery.[52] Accordingly the presumption is that the amount awarded is in accord with the evidence;[53] and it will not be presumed that the jury, in making the award, applied an erroneous rule of damages.[54] Where, however, the verdict was general and no sufficient proof was made of some items of damages, the court of appeals could not assume that the jury excluded such items from its verdict.[55]

Where four verdicts, each for the same amount, were rendered in a case where only one verdict was proper, it may be presumed that they were all for the same damages, and thus quadruplicates.[56]

Interest. Ordinarily a general verdict for plaintiff will be presumed to include interest, especially where the jury were instructed to award plaintiff interest in case they found for him.[57]

Where interest was allowed, it will be presumed, in the absence of a contrary showing, that it was properly allowed.[58]

(15) Judgment or Decree

In the absence of a contrary showing, the general presumption, on appeal, is in favor of the regularity and correctness of the lower court's judgment or decree.

In the absence of a contrary showing, the judgment or decree of the trial court is entitled, on appeal, to a presumption of regularity and correctness.[59] Accordingly it will be assumed, in the ab-trolar Co. v. Allen, C.C.A.Ohio, 124 F.2d 123.

47. Presumption inapplicable

Where special master appointed to determine the validity of a corporation's assignment of patents and the district court disagreed, the circuit court of appeals was not bound, with respect to stipulated testimony and documentary evidence, by the presumption which attaches to the conclusions of the lower tribunals when they are in accord.—General Kontrolar Co. v. Allen, C.C.A.Ohio, 124 F.2d 123.

Reason for rule

"Where the testimony consists of documentary evidence and depositions, the master is in no better position to determine an issue of fact than a reviewing court."—Carter Oil Co. v. McQuigg, C.C.A.Ill., 112 F.2d 275, 279.

48. U.S.—In re Turley, C.C.A.Ind., 92 F.2d 944.

49. Presumption of slight importance

In such a case any presumption in favor of the master's conclusion can be of but slight importance.—Kycoga Land Co. v. Kentucky River Coal Corporation, C.C.A.Ky., 110 F.2d 894, certiorari denied 61 S.Ct. 615, 312 U.S. 688, 85 L.Ed. 1125.

50. U.S.—Curtice Bros. Co. v. Barnard, C.C.A.Ind., 209 F. 589.

A very heavy burden rests on such party where the master's findings are concurred in by the trial court.—First Trust & Savings Bank v. Iowa-Wisconsin Bridge Co., C.C.A. Iowa, 98 F.2d 416, affirming Bechtel Trust Co. v. Iowa-Wisconsin Bridge Co., 19 F.Supp. 127, certiorari denied Phoenix Finance Corporation v. Iowa-Wisconsin Bridge Co., 59 S.Ct. 243, 305 U.S. 650, 83 L.Ed. 420, rehearing denied 59 S.Ct. 356, 305 U.S. 650, 83 L.Ed. 437.

51. U.S.—Ladd & Tilton Bank v. Boyle, C.C.A.Or., 299 F. 56—Fleming v. Noble, Mass., 250 F. 733, 163 C.C.A. 65.

52. Recovery for personal injuries

(1) An award of damages for personal injuries enjoys a large presumption of correctness on appeal.—In re Central R. of New Jersey, C.C.A.N.Y., 52 F.2d 20.

(2) Where the master, who paid some of the hospital and medical expenses of an injured servant, made no request that the award of damages be diminished on that ground, the award will not be disturbed on appeal, for it will be presumed that it was so diminished.—Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada v. Knapp, Mich., 233 F. 950, 147 C.C.A. 624.

53. Evidence given proper effect

Where testimony showing a pro tanto satisfaction of libelant's claim was received, it must be assumed on appeal that the lower court gave proper effect thereto in fixing amount of recovery.—The Emilia S. De Perez, Tex., 248 F. 480, 160 C.C.A. 490.

54. U.S.—Barrett v. Fournial, C.C.A. N.Y., 21 F.2d 298.

55. U.S.—Chas. Stolper Cooperage Co. v. Miller Hardwood Co., C.C.A. Wis., 90 F.2d 173.

56. Action based on four counts

Where each of four complaints was made basis of cause of action for malicious prosecution and damages under each count were identical, it must be conclusively presumed that verdict on first count included all recoverable damage, both actual and punitive.—Rouse v. Burnham, C.C.A.Kan., 51 F.2d 709.

57. U.S.—Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. H. W. Nelson Co., C.C.A. Mich., 116 F.2d 823, rehearing denied 118 F.2d 252.

58. U.S.—National Lock Co. v. Hogland, C.C.A.Ill., 101 F.2d 576.

59. U.S.—Mitchell v. Joseph, C.C.A. Ill., 117 F.2d 253—McGee v. Nee, C.C.A.Mo., 113 F.2d 543—Wabash Ry. Co. v. Bridal, C.C.A.Mo., 94 F.2d 117, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 63, 305 U.S. 602, 83 L.Ed. 382—Becker v. Evens & Howard Sewer Pipe Co., C.C.A.Mo., 70 F.2d 596

sence of a showing to the contrary, that the trial court had before it facts which warranted its judgment or decree[60] and that it correctly decided all issues before it.[61] So, where a perpetual injunction was refused by the court below, it will be assumed, in the absence of a contrary showing, that it was denied as a matter of discretion.[62]

Conformity of judgment to evidence. In the absence of a contrary showing, the judgment or decree of the court below will be presumed, on appeal, to be sustained by the evidence.[63] This is particularly true where the evidence has not been properly brought up and presented to the appellate court.[64]

Where the evidence is properly in the record, the court of appeals, on reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment, will view the evidence in the light most favorable to the successful party[65] and will draw every inference fairly deducible from the evidence in favor of the judgment;[66] and where the evidence is conflicting the burden is on appellant to show that the judgment is against a decided preponderance of the evidence.[67]

Judgment by consent or stipulation. When a judgment recites that it is by consent, confession, agreement, or stipulation, the recital will be taken as presumptively true.[68]

Judgment notwithstanding verdict. Where the case was tried before a jury, the court of appeals, in reviewing the grant or refusal of a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, will consider the evidence in the light most favorable to the party in whose favor the verdict was rendered[69] and will draw in his favor all inferences fairly deducible from the evidence.[70] Moreover, in such a case, the appellate court will not concern itself with the truthfulness of such party's testimony or the weight of his evidence, but will assume as established all facts that the evidence supporting his claims reasonably tends to establish,[71] and it will disregard the controverting evidence offered by his opponent.[72]

Motion for judgment. Where there is something in the record on which to base it, it may be presumed that a motion for judgment was properly made in the court below.[73] On appeal from an or-

Issues not raised on appeal

Where defendant did not appeal, and complainant appealed only from the award of damages, claiming it inadequate, it will be presumed on appeal that the determination of the trial court that defendant was liable was correct.—L. A. Westermann Co. v. Dispatch Printing Co., Ohio, 233 F. 609, 147 C.C.A. 417, reversed on other grounds 39 S.Ct. 194, 249 U.S. 100, 63 L.Ed. 499.

Determination presumed limited to proper matters

Circuit court of appeals would assume that district court after joinder of issues and trial, would determine only such questions as properly might be adjudicated.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Texas Co., C.C.A.Mo., 114 F.2d 952.

72. U.S.—Cranston v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., C.C.A.Pa., 109 F.2d 630.

73. Renewal of motion presumed

Statement in bill of exceptions that defendant moved for judgment at conclusion of testimony warrants presumption that motion filed at close of oral testimony was renewed der granting defendant's motion for summary judgment, the court of appeals must give plaintiff the benefit of every doubt.[74]

(16) Costs and Allowances

Where no contrary showing exists, the presumption on appeal is generally in favor of the action of the lower court with reference to costs and allowances.

In the absence of a contrary showing, the presumption on appeal is in favor of the action of the lower court with respect to the award and taxation of costs[75] and the allowance of fees[76] and expenses.[77] Thus, in the absence of a contrary showing, it will be presumed that an order awarding costs was regularly and legally made,[78] and items found taxable as costs will be presumed to have been found reasonable by the lower court.[79]

(17) Taking and Perfecting Appeal

The general presumption on appeal is that all steps necessary to bring the case into the appellate court were regularly and properly taken.

The general presumption on appeal is that all steps necessary to bring the case into the court of appeals were regularly and properly taken[80] and that the printed transcript of the record filed therein contains the entire record of what occurred in the court below.[81] In the absence of an affirmative showing in the record to the contrary, a material defect in the joinder of parties on appeal will not be presumed for the purpose of defeating the appellate court's jurisdiction which otherwise appears to be complete.[82]

Parties not taking an appeal are presumed to be satisfied with the decree rendered.[83]

Exceptions and bill of exceptions. Under the former practice relating to exceptions and bills of exceptions, various presumptions were indulged on appeal with respect to the taking of exceptions[84] and the making[85] and contents[86] of bills of exceptions.

after introduction of additional evidence.—U. S. v. McGrory, C.C.A.R.I., 63 F.2d 697, certiorari denied McGrory v. U. S., 53 S.Ct. 692, 289 U.S. 742, 77 L.Ed. 1489.

76. Where all facts are in record

(1) All reasonable presumptions should be indulged on appeal in favor of correctness of allowance fixed by district court for receiver's services, but reviewing court should not shirk responsibility of reviewing and revising awards, where entire facts are in record and undisputed.—Commodity Credit Corporation v. Bell, C. C.A.Tex., 107 F.2d 1001.

(2) It has been held that there is no presumption in favor of the reasonableness of an award of counsel fees for services rendered in a receivership proceeding had before a trial judge other than the one making the allowance where all the evidence on which the allowance was made is before the appellate court.—Federal Oil Marketing Corporation v. Cravens, C.C.A.Ark., 46 F.2d 938.

77. Allowances to protective committee

The action of the trial court in making allowances to a protective committee in an equity receivership proceeding is presumptively correct on appeal.—Palmer v. Watson, C.C.A. N.Y., 122 F.2d 598.

78. U.S.—Clarke v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., C.C.A.Wyo., 62 F.2d 440, certiorari denied 54 S.Ct. 49, 290 U.S. 629, 78 L.Ed. 548, three cases.

79. U.S.—Crowe v. Peaslee-Gaulbert Co., C.C.A.Mass., 37 F.2d 216.

80. Irregularities disregarded

Although petition for allowance of appeal and order allowing appeal referred to judgment and decree denying new trial or rehearing rather than to decree dismissing bill with prejudice, court would assume that appeal was from decree of dismissal. —Hale v. Hummel, C.C.A.Mo., 64 F.2d 210.

81. U.S.—Cavagnaro v. Latimer, C. C.A.N.J., 50 F.2d 898.

82. U.S.—Higbee v. Chadwick, Tenn., 220 F. 873, 136 C.C.A. 317.

83. Order fixing priority

Where no appeal was taken from an order giving counsel fees priority as against certain certificates, it must be assumed that the certificate holders did not assert a priority over such fees.—Ball v. Improved Property Holding Co. of New York, N.Y., 247 F. 645, 159 C.C.A. 547.

84. Exception presumed duly taken

(1) Where the taking of a particular exception was noted or recited in the bill of exceptions it would be presumed on appeal that the exception was duly taken.—Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Taulbee, C.C.A.Mont., 92 F.2d 20, certiorari denied Taulbee v. Great Northern R. Co., 58 S.Ct. 476, 302 U.S. 766, 82 L.Ed. 595 —Cromwell v. Slaney, C.C.A.Mass., 65 F.2d 940.

(2) So a general exception taken to the judgment and appearing in the entry thereof would be presumed as intended to challenge the judgment on the statutory ground that the facts found were not sufficient to support it.—Mayes v. Paul Jones & Co., C.C.A.Ky., 270 F. 121, affirming, D.C., Paul Jones & Co. v. Mayes, 265 F. 365.

Elimination of necessity for formal exceptions see supra § 292 b (3).

85. Settlement by judge not trial judge

Where the record did not show why a bill of exceptions was settled by a judge other than the trial judge, it would be assumed on appeal that a sufficient reason existed.—Copper River & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Reeder, Alaska, 211 F. 280, 127 C.C.A. 648.

Unreasonable presumptions would not be indulged with respect to the settlement of a bill of exceptions.—Walton v. Southern Pac. Co., C.C.A. Cal., 53 F.2d 63.

86. Evidence

Where the bill of exceptions did not contain a statement that it contained all the evidence, the presumption was that it did not.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Myers, Ill., 63 F. 793, 11 C.C.A. 439.

Elimination of necessity for bill of exception see supra § 295 c.

f. Discretion of Lower Court

The general rule is that, as to matters within the discretion of the trial court, review by the circuit court of appeals is limited to the question whether there has been an abuse of discretion, and that unless such abuse clearly appears the circuit court of appeals will not review or disturb the trial court's action or rulings with respect to such matters.

While a circuit court of appeals has declared it to be fundamental that the exercise of the trial court's discretion is not subject to review on appeal,[87] the general rule is that, as to matters within such discretion, review is limited to the question whether there has been an abuse of discretion, and that unless such abuse clearly appears the circuit court of appeals will not review or disturb the trial court's action or rulings with respect to such matters.[88] In this connection, the term "abuse" has

"Determination of abuse of discretion involves the exercise, by us, of sound judgment upon the facts. If there is controversy as to facts, and if the facts themselves largely define the wisdom of the discretion, review by the appellate court is seldom effective and it should not be. Then appellate court's review does not include trial court's discretion. If, however, the facts are not in dispute and it is a question of sound judgment . . . we are in about as good a position as . . . [the trial judge] to say whether the discretion has been wisely exercised. In short, both trial and appellate courts have the same situation upon which to exercise the same sound judgment."—In re A. Roth Co., C.C.A.Ill., 125 F.2d 396, 398—Weeks v. Bareco Oil Co., C.C.A.Ill., 125 F.2d 84, 93.

"Discretionary orders are not appealable, unless abuse of discretion is shown as error of law."—Luhrig Collieries Co. v. Interstate Coal & Dock Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 287 F. 711, 713, certiorari denied Thosmil Holding Corporation v. Interstate Coal & Dock Co., 43 S.Ct. 700, 262 U.S. 751, 67 L. Ed. 1215.

The burden of showing abuse of discretion is on the complaining party.—Palmer v. Watson, C.C.A.N.Y., 122 F.2d 598—Murray Hill Restaurant v. Thirteen Twenty One Locust, C.C.A.Pa., 98 F.2d 578.

Construction of rule or decree

(1) Trial court's construction of its rule is not disturbed, in absence of abuse of discretion.—Republic Acceptance Corporation v. Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co., C.C. A.Pa., 34 F.2d 660.

(2) The circuit court of appeals is bound by receivership court's construction of its final decree in receivership proceedings, where receivership court had a right to construe the decree as it was construed.—Texas Co. v. Chicago & A. R. Co., C.C.A.Ill., 126 F.2d 83, reversing, D.C., 36 F.Supp. 62.

Amount of judgment

The rule that a reviewing court should not disturb a judgment unless there has been an abuse of discretion means merely that it will not intervene so long as it regards the amount as being within permissible limits.—Barnett v. Equitable Trust Co. of New York, C.C.A.N.Y., 34 F. 2d 916, certiorari granted U. S. v. Equitable Trust Co. of New York, 50 S.Ct. 160, 280 U.S. 550, 74 L.Ed. 609, and modified on other grounds 51 S.Ct. 639, 283 U.S. 738, 75 L.Ed. 1379.

(10) Whether the issuance of an order granting dedimus potestatem is necessary to prevent a failure or delay of justice is for the trial court to determine.—Tom Ung Chai v. Burnett, C.C.A.Hawaii, 25 F.2d 574, certiorari denied 49 S.Ct. 19, 278 U.S. 614, 73 L.Ed. 538.

(11) The reviewing court has the duty of correcting an abuse of the trial court's discretion in this respect.—Spellman v. Sullivan, C.C.A.

been said to be peculiarly of legal significance, wholely unrelated to its meaning in common parlance;[89] and "discretion" and "abuse of discretion" have been said to be relative, rather than absolute, terms.[90] It has been said that the question of discretion is the display of sound judgment,[91] that discretion means the equitable decision of what is just and proper under the circumstances,[92] and that abuse of discretion in law means that the court's action was in error as a matter of law,[93] or was arbitrary and not justifiable in view of the situation and circumstances affecting the exercise of discretion,[94] or was such that no reasonable man would take the view adopted by the trial judge.[95]

If the trial court has refused to exercise a discretion vested in it, on the supposed ground of want of power,[96] or on a ground not sanctioned by law,[97] the judgment will generally be reversed to the end that the discretion shall be exercised.

Parties; process. An order granting or denying intervention may be reviewed only if the trial court has abused its discretion.[98] A decree based on a failure to join persons as parties will be reviewed despite a court rule giving the court discretion with respect to joinder, in certain cases, where the effect of applying the rule would be to deprive a party of the right to invoke the jurisdiction of a federal court.[99]

The appellate court generally will not review or revise the trial court's exercise of its discretionary powers with respect to the amendment of process.[1]

Pleadings. The general rule is that, unless a gross abuse of discretion, or a detriment to justice, clearly appears, the circuit court of appeals will not review or disturb the trial court's exercise of its discretion with respect to amendments to pleadings,[2]

(12) Circuit court of appeals will not determine whether order of dismissal was in fact entered, by examination of record, and of practice of clerk in dealing with such orders since "all such questions must be decided by the District Court in the first instance."—Zadig v. Individual interest; custody of res

Permitting or denying interventions in proceeding which is not a class suit, and in which complainants are suing merely to establish individual interests, and there is no res in court's custody to be finally disposed of by decree, rests wholly in trial court's discretion, and such order is ordinarily not appealable.—Aiken v. Cornell, C.C.A.Tex., 90 F.2d 567.

Interest in res

(1) "There is a class of cases in which a party has the equitable right to intervene, and the right to review by appeal any order denying that right. . . . The class includes those cases in which one claims a lien upon or an interest in specific property in the exclusive jurisdiction and subject to the exclusive disposition of a court, and his interest therein can be established, preserved, or enforced in no other way than by the determination and action of that court."—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. United States & Mexican Trust Co., Kan., 221 F. 545, 552, 137 C.C.A. 113.

(2) "It is only when he who seeks to intervene has a direct and immediate interest in a res, the subject of the suit, and cannot otherwise protect his interest, that the right of intervention is absolute, and a denial is the subject of an appeal."—Radford Iron Co. v. Appalachian Electric Power Co., C.C.A.Va., 62 F. 2d 940, 943, certiorari denied 53 S.Ct. 691, 289 U.S. 748, 77 L.Ed. 1494.

Order made after final decree

In suit in nature of general creditors' and stockholders' bill by creditors and stockholders against insurance corporation, denial of petition of stockholder for leave to intervene was discretionary order, not reviewable on appeal, where not made until after final decree was entered.—Stallings v. bills of particulars,[3] the filing of additional or supplemental pleadings,[4] or the striking out of pleadings.[5]

Provisional remedies; interlocutory or other proceedings before trial. The trial court's exercise of its discretionary powers with reference to provisional remedies or interlocutory matters will not be reviewed by the circuit court of appeals except for clear abuse of discretion.[6] So, in the absence of manifest abuse of discretion, the court will generally not review, modify, or disturb discretionary rulings as to the grant, refusal, modification, continuance, or dissolution of an injunction or restraining order;[7] and this is particularly true where the facts

gard of the facts.[11] Moreover, the general rule forbidding the review of discretionary rulings on injunctions does not apply where the trial court does not base its decision on a discretionary matter, but rests it on a point of law,[12] or where undisputed facts entitle or disentitle the moving party, as a matter of law, to the injunction sought.[13]

It is only for manifest abuse that the court will review or interfere with the lower court's exercise of its discretionary powers with respect to the appointment of, or refusal to appoint, a receiver,[14] the control of a receiver's actions in the discharge of his duties,[15] or the approval of a receiver's account;[16] and the discretion of the trial court as to the mode of establishing lien claims, whether by suit or by presentation to the receiver, has been declared not subject to review.[17] However, an order of appointment may be reviewable on the ground of a departure from the principles of equity, without proof of abuse of discretion.[18]

The trial court's refusal to transfer the case to the equity side, and its hearing thereof on the law side before a jury, should not be disturbed on appeal unless plainly erroneous.[19]

The appellate court will not review or reverse a discretionary ruling of the trial court granting or denying a dismissal or nonsuit before trial,[20] or

Dismissal for lack of prosecution
The decision of a trial court in dismissing cause for lack of prosecution will not be disturbed on appeal unless it appears that there has been a gross abuse of discretion.—Sweeney v. Anderson, C.C.A.Kan., 129 F.2d 756.

granting or denying a reinstatement of the cause after a dismissal or nonsuit,[21] except so far as the jurisdiction of the trial court to make the order is concerned.[22]

Reference. The action of the lower court in overruling exceptions to a master's report, for the reason that the record was not printed as required by the rules, is a nonreviewable matter of discretion;[23] and the trial court's refusal to again refer a matter to referees is not reviewable in the absence of an abuse of discretion.[24]

Severance or consolidation of causes. The action of the trial court in allowing or not allowing separate trials between plaintiff and different defendants,[25] or the uniting of the causes of action of several plaintiffs against one defendant,[26] will be reviewed only if there has been an abuse of discretion.

Continuance. Where a motion or application for a continuance or postponement is addressed to the discretion of the trial court, its grant or refusal thereof will not be reviewed or reversed unless an abuse of discretion is shown.[27]

Proceedings at trial. The circuit court of appeals will not review or disturb rulings of the trial court on discretionary matters as to the course and conduct of the trial, unless an abuse of discretion clearly appears.[28] So a ruling of the trial court with respect to the reception or rejection of evidence, as to which it is vested with a sound discretion, will be reviewed only where such discretion has been plainly abused;[29] and the order in which evidence should be introduced or received,[30] and the determination of preliminary questions of fact on which the competency or relevancy of a witness or evidence depends,[31] are matters on which the ruling of the trial court will be reviewed or reversed only where there has been a clear error or abuse of discretion; and the same rule applies to the trial court's determination of the mental competency of a witness,[32] and to its exercise of discretion with reference to the examination[33] and cross-examination[34] of witnesses, including the allowance of leading questions,[35] and with reference to the arguments or statements of counsel.[36]

Where the trial court is vested with discretion in that connection, its action with reference to dismissal or nonsuit, as by granting or denying a motion therefor,[37] or its action on an application to reinstate a cause after dismissal,[38] or a motion to direct[39] or set aside[40] a verdict, will not be disturbed unless such discretion has been abused.

New trial or rehearing. "Exceptional circumstances"

The action of the trial judge in granting or refusing a new trial "is not reviewable upon appeal, save in the most exceptional circumstances."—Ætna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Yeatts, C.C.A.Va., 122 F.2d 350, 354.

"Clearest case"

"Manifestly, it is only in the clearest case that such a ruling should be disturbed, as where the mistake is so obvious that no reasonable basis for the action of the court can be discerned."—Carter Coal Co. v. Nelson, C.C.A.Va., 91 F.2d 651, 654.

Motion to set aside verdict and judgment as contrary to law is nothing more than motion for new trial, and where it suggested no specific error, and was overruled, is not re-

respect to the review of discretionary rulings on motions for rehearing.[42] The grant of a new trial is more reluctantly interfered with than a denial thereof, and a much stronger showing is necessary to obtain a reversal where a new trial is granted than where it is denied.[43] When the trial court, in granting or refusing a new trial, rules on a question of law, such ruling is not a matter of discretion, and the ruling may and should be reviewed;[44] and the court's action with respect to an application for a new trial may be reviewed where it fails or refuses to exercise its discretion with respect thereto, as by refusing to entertain or determine the motion or to consider grounds urged,[45] such failure or refusal constituting an abuse of discretion;[46] but a refusal to entertain a motion or petition for a rehearing is not the subject of appeal.[47]

The rule that the action of the trial court in granting or denying a motion for new trial is not reviewable except for abuse of discretion applies where the motion is based on misconduct of counsel[48] or of jurors,[49] or bias of the jury,[50] although plain prejudicial error in the denial of a new trial on account of a juror's disqualification must be considered.[51] The rule also applies where the motion is based on insufficiency of the evidence to support the viewable.—Proctor v. Preferred Accident Ins. Co. of New York, C.C.A. Ky., 51 F.2d 15.

Holding as to evidence in opinion

A holding, in the opinion denying a motion for a new trial, that there was evidence to submit to the jury is not reviewable on appeal.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Kirby, C.C.A. Pa., 37 F.2d 480.

Reduction of damages as condition of denial

The action of trial court sitting in New York, in requiring plaintiff to stipulate for a reduction of damages as condition of denial of motion for new trial, can be reviewed by circuit court of appeals, if at all, only when there has been a plain abuse of discretion.—Burris v. American Chicle Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 120 F.2d 218, affirming, D.C., 33 F.Supp. 104.

"A motion to restrict the issues [on a new trial] is addressed, in the first instance, to the sound discretion of the court, and a denial of the motion ought not lightly to be disturbed."—Schuerholz v. Roach, C.C.A. Va., 58 F.2d 32, 33, certiorari denied Scheurholz v. Roach, 53 S.Ct. 78, 287 U.S. 623, 77 L.Ed. 541.

Verdict against instructions and evidence

(1) Where verdict is directly contrary to the instructions of the court and without evidence to support it, a motion to set it aside and for a new trial is in effect an exception to the verdict, which does not call for an exercise of discretion, but for a ruling on a question of law, which is reviewable.—Stetson v. Stindt, C.C.A. Pa., 279 F. 209, reversing, D.C., Stindt v. Stetson, 272 F. 770.

(2) An exception to a denial of a motion for new trial, on the grounds that the jury misinterpreted and misapplied or disregarded the instructions, and that the verdict was against the evidence and the weight of evidence and the law, was held to raise no question of law for the consideration of the circuit court of appeals.—Slip Scarf Co. v. Amount uncontroverted

Where jury, in violation of instructions, found for amount less than that which uncontroverted evidence showed plaintiff was entitled to recover, if at all, refusal of motion for new trial was such abuse of discretion that reversal of judgment was proper.—Glenwood Irr. Co. v. Vallery, Colo., 248 F. 483, 160 C.C. A. 493.

Proceedings following judgment; judicial sale. The discretion of the court ordering a judicial sale as to whether it shall be confirmed or denied confirmation, as for inadequacy of price, will not be interfered with on appeal, in the absence of an abuse of discretion;[55] and the same is true of the court's exercise of discretion as to the time for selling under a foreclosure decree,[56] or as to the time within which money should be paid under a bid for property sold in a creditor's suit.[57]

The trial court's exercise of discretion with reference to an application to open, vacate, or set aside a judgment will not be disturbed on appeal except for a clear abuse of discretion;[58] and the same is true of the denial of a motion for a nunc pro tunc order to amend a judgment.[59]

Costs and fees. The trial court's exercise of the discretion with which it may be vested as to the awarding or taxation of costs,[60] or as to the allowance of interest[61] or of the fees of attorneys,[62] receivers,[63] or as to the allowance of the fees or

Rejection of bids

Where the court ordered property sold subject to confirmation, reserving the right to reject any and all bids for inadequacy of price, the court's exercise of discretion with respect to such reserved power will seldom be reviewed.—McClintic-Marshall Co. v. Different final result not likely

Trial court's refusal to vacate decree based on order pro confesso on defendant's cross bill would not be disturbed on appeal, where plaintiff failed to present meritorious defense to counterclaim, so that it could not be said that different final result would be reached.—Koen v. compensation of masters,[64] or auditors,[65] or of compensation or expenses to a protective committee of stockholders,[66] will not be interfered with on appeal unless an abuse of discretion is clearly shown; but the allowance of fees in a manifestly insufficient or excessive amount indicates, or constitutes, an abuse of discretion, and is reviewable.[67] Where the entire decree and the proceedings of the lower court are before the appellate court, the latter will consider whether the discretion as to costs was properly exercised;[68] and the appellate court will not apply the rule as to discretion, but will reverse, where its conclusions as to proper fees, based on substantially the same information as that of the trial court, are greatly at variance with the conclusions of that court.[69]

(1) In General

As a general rule, the circuit court of appeals will not review questions of fact determined below except for the purpose of ascertaining the existence of any evidence to support the determination.

As a general rule, questions of fact are to be tried and determined in the court of original jurisdiction, and not in the circuit court of appeals which normally exercises strictly the functions of a court of review for the correction of errors of law.[70] However, as may be seen infra subdivision (3) of this section, the appellate court may, in some cases, review the fact findings of the trial court in a case tried without a jury, although it will, as a rule, abide by such findings.

In accordance with the general rule just stated, the probative force of evidence is ordinarily for the consideration of the triers of fact in the court below, and the appellate court cannot or will not consider or pass on the credibility of witnesses,[71] or the weight of the evidence,[72] except to the extent of ascertaining the existence of any evidence to support the ultimate facts found.[73] So, where there is any admissible or competent substantial evidence on the whole record,[74] or reasonable inference

Action at law or in equity

(1) Generally, circuit court of appeals may determine an issue of fact in an equity case, but cannot do so in a law case tried by a jury where there is sufficient evidence to sustain verdict or judgment.—Kapiolani Maternity and Gynecological Hospital v. Wodehouse, C.C.A.Hawaii, 70 F.2d 793.

(2) Where the circuit court of appeals is given a reviewing jurisdiction, it extends to all fact questions such as exist in appeals from equity decrees except where that right is denied by statute.—National Labor Relations Board v. Acme-Evans Co., C.C.A., 130 F.2d 477.

Where new trial on fact issues was required, circuit court of appeals would not, under circumstances, pass on sufficiency of facts pleaded to sustain judgment.—Indemnity Ins. Co. of North America v. Levering, C.C.A. Cal., 59 F.2d 719.

Inferences

It is the province of trial court to determine the weight of the evidence and to draw such inferences as the direct evidence and the circumstances reasonably warrant.—American Ins. Co. v. Scheufler, C.C.A.Mo., 129 F.2d 143, affirming, D.C., American Ins. Co. v. Lucas, 38 F.Supp. 896, motion denied 38 F.Supp. 926, appeal dismissed 62 S.Ct. 107, 314 U.S. 575, 86 L.Ed. 466—Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia Pictures Corporation, C.C. A.Ill., 120 F.2d 891.

therefrom,[75] to support the fact determined in the lower court, the fact so determined will not be disturbed on appeal.[76] Also questions of fact determined below will not be disturbed on appeal where the evidence is conflicting,[77] or where different minds might arrive at opposite conclusions on a consideration of the evidence.[78]

On the other hand, the facts disclosed by the record may be considered and reviewed by the appellate court when the action of the lower court based thereon appears to be clearly erroneous,[79] as where it is not sustained by sufficient evidence.[80] It has also been held that the reviewing court is not bound by facts determined in the lower court based on uncontradicted evidence.[81]

The trial court's determination of preliminary fact questions on which the competency of witnesses or admissibility of evidence depends is generally final,[82] unless there is no evidence to support it.[83]

Questions of fact on motions or other special proceedings. When the determination of questions as to motions or other special proceedings depends on facts laid before the trial court, its decision is ordinarily governed by the same rules relating to findings of fact generally as are discussed above, and the appellate court will not ordinarily interfere with such determination.[84] So the circuit court of appeals will not as a rule review the action of the trial court in granting or denying a motion for a new trial for error of fact.[85]

Other statements of rule

(1) Generally.—Noller v. London & Lancashire Indemnity Co. of Amer-

However, it is for the circuit court of appeals to decide whether there is any evidence in support of the verdict,[94] and where there is no legal or competent supporting evidence the court will set the verdict aside.[95] Where the evidence in a case is undisputed, its legal effect presents a question of law and not of fact, and the verdict is subject to review.[96] A verdict rendered on submission of issues in an equity case to a jury is generally held to be merely advisory, and not binding either on the court below or on the appellate court.[97]

Amount of recovery. A finding of value or the amount of damages is so much a matter within the exclusive province of the jury that it will ordinarily not be disturbed by the reviewing court.[98] So the circuit court of appeals will refuse to set aside a judgment on the ground that the award of damages is excessive,[99] or that the award of damages is inadequate,[1] unless it is so palpably erroneous as to indicate bias, passion, prejudice, corruption, outside influence, or mistake.[2]

Approval of trial court; successive verdicts. The fact that the trial court considered the evidence and approved the verdict is always a circumstance of great weight in determining whether a verdict shall be set aside on appeal for insufficiency of the evidence.[3] Also, the fact that several successive juries have reached the same verdict will usually deter the appellate court from disturbing the last;[4] but such fact will not preclude the appellate court from setting aside a verdict not supported by substantial evidence.[5] A verdict in a case in which there has been several trials should be allowed to stand unless clearly erroneous.[6]

(3) Findings of Court
(a) In general
(b) When reviewable

(a) In General

Generally, the circuit court of appeals may review the trial court's findings to the extent permitted in equity appeals, and it must accept such findings, especially on conflicting evidence, unless they are clearly erroneous, giving due regard to the trial court's opportunity to judge the credibility of the witnesses.

It was formerly the rule that the fact findings of the trial court in a case tried without a jury were to be given the same effect or weight as jury verdicts,[7] and were to be regarded as conclusive and binding on the appellate court if sustained by substantial evidence.[8] It is now generally held, under

Law or equity

Power of court to review facts depended on whether appeal was from judgment at law or decree in equity. —Lumbermen's Trust Co. v. Town of Ryegate, C.C.A.Mont., 61 F.2d 14, reversing, D.C., 50 F.2d 219.

Biggs, C.C.A.N.C., 102 F.2d 46.

"Prior to the effective date . . . of the Rules of Civil Procedure, the findings of fact of a trial court in an action at law tried without a jury, were as conclusive, upon review, as a verdict of a jury, and could not be set aside by the reviewing court if there was any substantial evidence to support them. A different rule prevailed in equity cases. The findings of fact of the trial court in such cases were presumptively correct, and unless clearly against the weight of the evidence or induced by an erroneous view of the law would not be disturbed by a reviewing court. . . . The effect of Rule 52(a) was to establish a uniform standard for testing the validity of findings of fact in any case tried without a jury. The standard adopted was that which had always prevailed in equity. This court, with respect to jury-waived cases, is no longer merely a court of error which considers only questions of law. It now acts as a court of review in all non-jury cases in accordance with the practice which formerly prevailed in equity appeals."—Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Kepler, C.C.A.Neb., 116 F.2d 1, 4.

Witnesses not heard

(1) The fact that the trial judge did not see the witnesses on whose testimony his finding is based greatly lessens the conclusiveness of such finding.—Banister v. Solomon, C.C.A. N.Y., 126 F.2d 740.

facts were correctly found.[14]

(b) When Reviewable

The trial court's findings of fact are not conclusive, either at law or in equity, and they may be reviewed and set aside if they lack evidential support, are clearly erroneous, or are against the clear weight of the evidence. The appellate court is not obliged to accept findings representing conclusions of law rather than of fact or findings based on documentary evidence.

Notwithstanding the general rule that questions of fact ordinarily will not be reviewed by the circuit court of appeals, the trial court's findings of fact are not conclusive, and they may be considered and set aside by the appellate court if they are clearly erroneous,[15] or if they are against the clear weight of the evidence.[16] So the question of whether or not the fact findings below are sufficiently sustained

Refusal to find facts

(1) Where a refusal to find facts involves the weighing of evidence, it is as conclusive on appeal as affirmative findings.—Pennok Oil Co. v. Roxaba Petroleum Co. of Oklahoma, C.C.A.Okl., 289 F. 416—Schoenwald v. Bishop, Alaska, 244 F. 715, 157 C.C.A. 163—Nashville Interurban Ry. v. Barnum, N.Y., 212 F. 634, 129 C.C.A. 170.

(2) However, where special findings have been requested and refused, the appellate court may review the evidence to see if it is such as imposed on the trial court the duty to grant the request for special findings.—Bunday v. Huntington, S.D., 224 F. 847, 140 C.C.A. 415.

Findings set aside

(1) Contrary to the evidence.—Hooper v. First Exchange Nat. Bank of Coeur D'Alene, C.C.A.Idaho, 53 F.2d 593—Paine v. St. Paul Union Stockyards Co., C.C.A.Minn., 28 F.2d 463, modified on other grounds 35 F.2d 624—4 C.J. p 880 note 96.

(2) Without support in the evidence.—Mermis v. Waldo, C.C.A.Kan., 91 F.2d 391—Stuyvesant Ins. Co. v. Sussex Fire Ins. Co., C.C.A.N.J., 90 F.2d 281, certiorari denied 58 S.Ct. 144, 302 U.S. 742, 82 L.Ed. 573.

(3) Due to, or colored by, an error or misconception of law.—Chicago & A. Ry. Co. v. Pressed Steel Car Co., Ill., 243 F. 883, 156 C.C.A. 395, certiorari denied 38 S.Ct. 11, 245 U.S. 652, 62 L.Ed. 532.

16. U.S.—State Farm Mut. Automobile Ins. Co. v. Bonacci, C.C.A.Neb., 111 F.2d 412—Williams v. Williams, C.C.A.Ill., 61 F.2d 257, certiorari denied 53 S.Ct. 404, 288 U.S. 612, 77 L.Ed. 986.

or supported by the record evidence is one which will be passed on by the appellate court.[17] In this respect the findings, unless clearly erroneous, are to be regarded as adequately supported and left undisturbed if they are sustained by sufficient evidence,[18] or by substantial evidence.[19]

Insufficient supporting evidence

Under rule that fact findings shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, a finding of fact is "clearly erroneous" if it is against the clear weight of the evidence, and it does not suffice that it is supported by evidence.—Fleming v. Palmer, C.C.A. Puerto Rico, 123 F.2d 749.

Improper evidence not considered

When considering whether the findings have proper evidentiary support, the appellate court will eliminate from consideration all incompetent and immaterial evidence.—Clauson v. U. S., C.C.A.S.D., 60 F.2d 694.

Findings representing conclusions of law. The circuit court of appeals is, of course, not bound by findings which are conclusions of law rather than of fact,[20] and accordingly findings based on facts which are not in dispute, or which are agreed to by the parties, present questions of law proper for the determination of the appellate court unhampered by the trial court's conclusions.[21] So also the appellate court will always review to determine whether the findings made support the judgment rendered, or the ultimate conclusion drawn;[22] and it may also pass on the propriety of conclusions or ultimate find-

Jurisdiction

Where the review is of the decision of the trial court on the question of jurisdiction, the reviewing court will examine the evidence of the facts bearing on that question.—Mas v. Owens-Illinois Glass Co., D.C.Va., 34 F.Supp. 415.

Denomination of finding

That district court denominated its holding a "finding of fact" was not binding upon circuit court of appeals.—Bendix Home Appliances v. Radio Accessories Co., C.C.A.Neb., 129 F.2d 177.

Failure to make finding

Where trial court made no ade-

ings of fact which have been reached by way of deduction or inference from probative or subordinate facts.[23]

Findings based on documentary evidence. As a rule, the limitation on the reviewing court's authority to review and set aside the trial court's findings of fact is inapplicable where the findings are based on evidence which is entirely or largely documentary,[24] for under such circumstances the appellate court is in just as good a position as the trial court to form a just estimate of the credence to be given to the testimony.[25]

In equity. As a general rule, an appeal in an equity case involves examination of both the law and the facts, so that the circuit court of appeals is in no way concluded by the fact findings of the trial court and may review and weigh all the evidence in the case and make its own findings.[26] However, the findings of the trial court are entitled to considerable weight and deference,[27] depending on the extent to which the trial judge was in a favorable position to determine the facts accurately,[28]

quate finding of fact on which to base determination of estoppel, circuit court of appeals could look to evidence to determine whether such fact existed.—Meeker v. Halsey, C.C.A.N.Y., 87 F.2d 299.

23. U.S.—U. S. v. Armature Rewinding Co., C.C.A.Mo., 124 F.2d 589—Brown v. U. S., C.C.A.Pa., 95 F.2d 487, reversing, D.C., 19 F.Supp. 825.

Merchants' Ass'n, C.C.A.Ohio, 64 F.2d 575—Nashua Mfg. Co. v. Berenzweig, C.C.A.Ill., 39 F.2d 896.

Where evidence is conflicting, however, trial court's finding will not be disturbed unless plainly wrong, even though evidence is largely documentary.—Olympic Salt Water Co. v. Shipowners' & Merchants' Tugboat Co., C.C.A.Cal., 48 F.2d 49, certiorari denied 52 S.Ct. 8, 284 U.S. 619, 76 L.Ed. 528—Bell v. Saxon, C.C.A.Fla., 296 F. 690.

Oral and documentary evidence

When in addition to the documentary or written evidence there is also some oral evidence which enters into the trial court's consideration or affords a partial basis for the findings, it is usually held that the findings are to be accorded their usual binding effect.—Patton-Tully Transp. Co. v. Barrett, C.C.A.Ohio, 37 F.2d 516.

If the document or instrument is uncertain or ambiguous, the trial court's construction made in the light of the surrounding circumstances will be given deference.—Frank v. Atwood, C.C.A.Pa., 75 F.2d 918.

Case improperly tried at law

Where case seeking relief cognizable in equity had been improperly tried before a jury and trial judge withdrew case from jury and ordered suit dismissed as of nonsuit, appellate court would examine evidence as upon an appeal in equity in order to determine correctness of district judge's conclusion.—Vann v. findings made, if the appellate court is convinced that the findings or decree of the trial court is clearly wrong,[32] or against the clear weight or preponderence of the evidence.[33]

(4) Findings of Referee, Master, or Like Officer

Findings of a master or referee, having support in the evidence, ordinarily will not be disturbed on appeal, especially where they have been approved by the trial court; but such findings are not of determinative weight under all circumstances, and may be set aside where clearly erroneous. The appellate court must itself determine the facts where the master's findings have been disapproved by the trial court.

On appeal to the circuit court of appeals, the findings or report of a referee, master, commissioner, auditor, or register are ordinarily regarded as presumptively correct, and will not be disturbed by the appellate court,[34] at least where supported by substantial evidence.[35] However, such findings are not

Against weight of evidence

(1) Findings merely against weight of evidence need not be disturbed on appeal.—American Pipe & Construction Co. v. Westchester County, C.C.A.N.Y., 292 F. 941—4 C.J. p 893 note 41.

(2) However, findings clearly and manifestly against weight of evidence may be set aside.—Horvath v. McCord Radiator & Mfg. Co., C.C.A. Administrative determination

Although the trial court hears a case de novo on review of a determination of an administrative body. the findings of such administrative body will not be disregarded by the appellate court but will be given some weight.—New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co. v. Murray, C.C.A.Wis., 105 F.2d 212.

of determinative weight under all circumstances or in all kinds of proceedings,[36] and they may be set aside where clearly erroneous.[37]

The fact that the findings of the referee, master, or like officer have been approved by the trial court entitles such findings to greater weight;[38] and, while they are not conclusive in such case and may under some circumstances be set aside,[39] they will not as a rule be disturbed by the reviewing court[40]

Findings of court

The rule of civil procedure that fact findings shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and that master's findings shall be considered as findings of the court to the extent that the court adopts them, is but the formulation of practice long prevailing in equity courts.—Stonega Coke & Coal Co. v. Price, C.C.A.W.Va., 106 F.2d 411, modifying, D.C., Price v. Stonega Coke & Coal Co., 26 F.Supp. 172, certiorari denied Stonega Coke & Coal Co. v. Price, 60 S.Ct. 263, 308 U.S. 618, 84 L.Ed. 516.

heard the witnesses[43] and to the conclusion of the trial court that the master's findings were erroneous.[44]

(5) Dismissal, Nonsuit, or Direction of Verdict

As a general rule, the grant or refusal of a motion for a directed verdict or nonsuit raises only the question of the existence of legally sufficient evidence to sustain the determination below.

While the grant or refusal of a motion for a directed verdict or nonsuit is reviewable, the circuit court of appeals will not weigh the evidence but will consider only the question of the existence of legally sufficient evidence to sustain the trial court's determination.[45] On such review, the appellate court must view the evidence in the light least favorable to the moving party and most favorable to the adverse party, see supra subdivision e (9) of this section. Unless manifestly wrong,[46] the action of the trial court will be upheld.[47]

Where both parties moved for a directed verdict, the trial court's decision is not conclusive on the appellate court and it may reverse such decision where the evidence warrants submission of the case to the jury, for the reason that under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 50, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, such action by the parties is no longer a waiver of jury trial.[48] Formerly the trial court's 2d 762—Armstrong v. Lone Star Refining Co., C.C.A.Kan., 20 F.2d 625.

Limited order of reference
Where order of reference reserved full power of review and specifically denied any presumption to be attached to the master's findings, the master's findings were not to any extent binding on the court of appeals.—Kycoga Land Co. v. Kentucky River Coal Corporation, C.C.A.Ky., 110 F.2d 894, certiorari denied 61 S.Ct. 615, 312 U.S. 688, 85 L.Ed. 1125.

43. U.S.—Roberts v. Southern Surety Co., C.C.A.N.C., 33 F.2d 501—Dorrance v. Dorrance, C.C.A.Mo., 264 F. 53, certiorari denied 41 S.Ct. 216, 254 U.S. 654, 65 L.Ed. 459.

Practice unchanged
In weighing conflicting findings by master and district court, practice is the same under rules of civil procedure as under the prior equity rules, and hence appellate court is not required to give more weight to master's finding than under equity rule.—Carter Oil Co. v. McQuigg, C.C.A.Ill., 112 F.2d 275, affirming, D.C., 27 F.Supp. 182.

Right to appellate review
Defendant by moving to dismiss complaint at close of case was not deprived of right to appellate review of question whether directed verdict for plaintiff was justified.—Hartman Goldsmith & Co. v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, C.C.A.N.Y., 33 F.2d 89.

Physical facts
In determining whether defendant's motion for directed verdict should have been granted because of the physical facts, the test was not whether circuit court of appeals might have been convinced that defendants' theory of occurrence of accident was actually true, but whether physical facts made the theory of plaintiffs so physically impossible that verdict for plaintiffs could not be sustained.—Stolte v. Larkin, C.C.A.Minn., 110 F.2d 226.

decision stood on the same footing as a jury verdict and was in general conclusive on both parties where supported by, and not clearly against, the weight of the evidence;[49] and the reviewing court was limited to a consideration of the law and would accept, without review, the determination of the trial court as to the facts, unless it was without any substantial support.[50]

h. Harmless Error

(1) In general
(2) Evidence and witnesses

(1) In General

Generally no cognizance will be taken of error which is nonprejudicial to the rights of the party complaining; whether error is harmless is dependent on the circumstances of the case as ascertained from the record, and the burden of proof with respect to the existence of prejudice is dependent on the intrinsic character of the error.

Under various federal statutes, 28 U.S.C.A. § 391, and Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 61, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, the circuit court of appeals must disregard error which could not have affected the substantial rights of the parties,[51] and even apart from statute it is generally recognized that error as such, unaccompanied by prejudice, is not ground for reversal.[52] Whether, in any given instance, an error is harmless depends largely on the circumstances of the particular case,[53] and is to be determined solely from the record.[54]

Error will be considered harmless and not to operate to reverse the judgment appealed from where such judgment is clearly correct on the merits,[55] or where the error could not have affected the final result;[56] and it is a rule of universal application that appellant cannot complain of errors which were favorable to himself.[57] Technical or formal errors will be deemed harmless on appeal.[58]

Presumptions and burden of proof as to effect of error. In the case of errors which are intrinsically collateral and without influence on the final result, it is generally held that the record must not only establish error, but also that the party complaining was prejudiced thereby.[59] However, the opposite is true as to those errors which, by fair and legitimate inference, have a potential connection with the final verdict or judgment, and if there is such error apparent on the face of the record a presumption of prejudice arises which cannot be disregarded, unless the record affirmatively discloses that the error was not prejudicial.[60]

Evidence
(1) Where the record shows that evidence which may, not improbably, have had a part in the final outcome

Application of rules to particular errors. The general rule stated above that nonprejudicial errors do not constitute ground for reversal has been applied to error asserted on appeal as to the remedy or procedure used or followed,[61] parties,[62] defective or insufficient pleadings,[63] rulings on pleadings[64] or motions directed to the pleadings,[65] variance be-of the case has been erroneously admitted for the jury's consideration, prejudice will be presumed, and the burden will rest on appellee to show affirmatively that no prejudice resulted.—Worcester v. Pure Torpedo Co., C.C.A.Ill., 127 F.2d 945—Farris v. Interstate Circuit, C.C.A.Tex., 116 F.2d 409—Antietam Paper Co. v. Womble. C.C.A.Fla., 294 F. 795—National Biscuit Co. v. amount of recovery or damages.[90]

A failure or refusal to give proper instructions to the jury will necessitate a reversal where it cannot be said that appellant was not prejudiced.[91] However, appellant cannot complain of the refusal of instructions where no prejudice resulted from such refusal.[92]

(2) Evidence and Witnesses

In the absence of prejudice, error in respect of evidence or witnesses will be considered harmless and will not necessitate a reversal.

If prejudice does not result, a cause will not be reversed on appeal for erroneous rulings in respect of evidence generally,[93] or in respect of the exam-

i. Error Waived in Appellate Court

(1) Express waiver
(2) Implied waiver

(1) Express Waiver

An assignment of error may be waived by an entry on the record or by express waiver in the brief or argument; and no further consideration will be given it.

An assignment of error may be waived by an entry on the record or by express waiver in the brief or oral argument, and such matter will not be further considered,[9] unless it is necessary to secure justice.[10]

(2) Implied Waiver

A waiver of an assignment of error will generally be implied where the appellant has failed to discuss it or urge it in some necessary manner, or where he has taken proceedings inconsistent with his objection.

Questions assigned as error by an appellant are generally deemed to have been abandoned or waived where they are not urged or discussed on appeal.[11]

So an assignment of error will ordinarily be regarded as waived and no consideration will be given it, unless it is properly presented by brief[12] or argument;[13] and, ordinarily where the point is not presented in the argument in chief or in the opening brief, it will be disregarded if referred to for the first time in the closing or reply brief.[14] The mere mention of an assignment of error in a brief, without sufficient argument or citation of authorities in support thereof, must be treated as a waiver of the error claimed.[15] Although not argued on appeal, the question of the trial court's jurisdiction is, however, necessarily before the circuit court of appeals.[16]

A waiver of error will also be implied where a party to an appeal takes proceedings inconsistent with the particular error assigned.[17]

Particular applications of rules. Under the rules above set out, the following matters, among others, have been deemed waived when not properly presented in the brief or argument in the circuit court of appeals: objections to rulings on the admission

Waiver overlooked

The waiver of assignments of error, for failure to argue the same on appeal, will, where appellant proceeds on the theory that the action was one of trover, when it was also one on the case, be overlooked, and the assignment will be considered. —Arnold v. or exclusion of evidence;[18] objections to the giving or refusing of instructions;[19] objections to verdicts;[20] and objections to findings.[21] Where the objection is not properly urged in counsel's brief or argument, errors will also be regarded as waived, in respect of the pleadings.[22]

j. Decisions of Intermediate Courts

Ordinarily in appeals from an intermediate appellate court questions must be raised and passed on in such intermediate court before they may be reviewed by the circuit court of appeals; and, where two independent tribunals have examined the facts and reached a like result, their conclusion will not lightly be disturbed.

Ordinarily where a case has been brought up for review from an intermediate court of appellate jurisdiction to the circuit court of appeals, questions will not be considered which were neither raised in the court of first instance nor assigned for error in the intermediate court,[23] or which could have been, but were not, properly raised and passed on in the intermediate court.[24] When two independent and distinct tribunals have examined the facts and reached a like result, the conclusion so reached should not be lightly disturbed by a higher court,[25] but, where two fact-finding tribunals have reached different conclusions, the circuit court of appeals will not give the same weight to a finding which would be given otherwise.[26] An assignment that the intermediate appellate court erred in giving undue weight to evidence adduced at the trial and in altering the conclusions of the trial court raises questions of fact which cannot be considered by the circuit court of appeals.[27]

k. Subsequent Appeals

Generally an adjudication on the first appeal to a circuit court of appeals having jurisdiction of the cause is the law of the case on all subsequent appeals in which the facts are substantially the same, and will be reconsidered only under exceptional circumstances and when cogent reasons therefor exist.

It may be stated as a rule of general application that, where the evidence on a second or succeeding appeal is substantially the same as that on the first or preceding appeal, all matters, questions, points, or issues adjudicated on the prior appeal are the law of the case on all subsequent appeals and will not be reconsidered or readjudicated therein.[28] If, its judgment is not the law of the case on a subsequent appeal.[29] Generally, a party on a second appeal involving the same subject matter and between the same parties is estopped to assert a position or theory inconsistent with that relied on upon the first appeal to the prejudice of his adversary.[30]

While the adjudication on a former appeal has been declared to be res judicata on subsequent appeals in the case involving substantially the same facts,[31] the doctrine of the law of the case does not carry the same consequences as the rule of res judicata, since the law of the case directs discretion whereas res judicata supersedes it and compels judgment.[32]

In accordance with the general rule stated, where, after a definite determination, the court has remanded the cause for further action below, it will refuse to examine questions other than those arising subsequently to such determination and remand, or other than the propriety of the compliance with its mandate;[33] and, if the court below has proceeded in substantial conformity to the directions of the appellate court, its action will not be questioned on a second appeal.[34] A new appeal is an appropriate remedy, however, if the mandate does not cover the entire case, but leaves something undetermined to be inquired into and adjudicated,[35] or if the lower court misconstrues the decree of the appellate court and does not give full effect to its mandate;[36] and, where the last decree of the lower court does not touch any matter adjudged on the former appeal or covered by the mandate, it may be reviewed.[37]

Former decision erroneous. While the remedy of the party deeming himself aggrieved by an erroneous decision on appeal is ordinarily held to be to seek a rehearing,[38] the doctrine of the law of the case is qualified in a number of decisions which hold that, although the court will not review or reconsider questions decided on a former appeal except in most unusual circumstances or in a very clear case of error,[39] the court is not precluded from doing so, and the former decision may be reconsidered and reversed under exceptional circumstances and when cogent reasons therefor exist.[40]

40. U.S.—White v. Higgins, supra—Connett v. City of Jerseyville, C.C.A.Ill., 110 F.2d 1015—Kelly-Spring-

For example, the court will overrule or modify its former decision where the decision is palpably erroneous or grossly and manifestly unjust, or where the mischief to be cured far outweighs any injury that may be done in the particular case.[41] So the circuit court of appeals will change a ruling made on a prior appeal in the same case to conform to a subsequent decision of the supreme court in another case.[42] Where the circuit court of appeals on the prior appeal erred in remanding the case to the trial court for further evidence instead of deciding the case on the record, the court of appeals will not, on the subsequent appeal, consider a contention that the findings made after remand were not supported by substantial evidence.[43]

Errors existing on former review. It is generally held, on a second or subsequent appeal, that the court will not consider matters assigned as error, which arose prior to the first appeal or writ of error, and which might have been raised thereon, but were not, or matters appearing in the original record which might have been corrected on the first hearing, but were not urged.[44] This rule, however, is one of practice, rather than one of jurisdiction;[45] and, according to some authority, an appellate tribunal is bound by its prior decision only on the points distinctly made and determined, and not on points which might have been raised, but were not.[46] A judgment of reversal is not necessarily an adjudication of any other questions than those in terms discussed and decided.[47] A decision on which a judgment is not rendered is not binding on a subsequent appeal, as where an appeal is abandoned or dismissed.[48]

Cross appeals. Where, on an appeal or review, a party fails to prosecute a cross appeal or to urge assignments of error which might have been effectively presented, he may be precluded from such prosecution or presentation on a subsequent appeal.[49]

New questions on second appeal. While, as already discussed, generally all questions reserved for review by an appellate court must be presented on

Unnecessary decision

A party is not estopped from raising a question of law on a second appeal, because it might have been, but was not, raised on the former appeal where the decision would have been unnecessary on the former appeal.—Chase v. U. S., C.C.A.Neb., 261 F. 833, affirmed 41 S.Ct. 417, 256 U.S. 1, 65 L.Ed. 801.

48. Dismissal for want of equity is not an adjudication that the court does not have jurisdiction.—Burnrite Coal Briquette Co. v. Riggs, N. J., 47 S.Ct. 578, 274 U.S. 208, 71 L. Ed. 1002, affirming, C.C.A., 6 F.2d 226, certiorari granted 46 S.Ct. 106, 269 U.S. 546, 70 L.Ed. 405.

the first appeal therefrom after the final judgment or not at all, as thereafter all questions presented by the record will be considered as finally determined by the judgment, and all such questions not expressly affirmed or reversed will, by implication, be deemed affirmed, yet, where new questions arise, such as were not and could not have been fully determined on the former appeal, such rule is without force.[50] Accordingly, where different questions arise on the second appeal, and the record presents a different state of facts, the former determination is not controlling.[51] In like manner, if the essential facts and evidence or the issues and pleadings on the subsequent appeal are substantially different and the record presents a materially different situation, the doctrine of the law of the case has no application to the former decision or parts thereof affected by the altered circumstances,[52] but to have this effect the new evidence must be more than merely cumulative or immaterial.[53]

Appeals to supreme court. The determination of the supreme court, on the review of a decision of the circuit court of appeals, cannot be questioned on a second appeal in the latter court[54] unless a different question is presented.[55] Thus the circuit court of appeals may examine the opinion and mandate of the supreme court to determine whether the decision of the district court on remand from the supreme court is on a question left open, on a new issue, or on some matter properly appealable to the circuit court of appeals,[56] but has no power to review the decision of the supreme court or to construe and enforce its mandate in respect of matters found to be within the compass of its decision.[57] The decision of the circuit court of appeals on the first appeal of a cause is not res judicata or conclusive on the supreme court where, after a subsequent appeal to the circuit court of appeals, a further appeal is taken to the supreme court.[58]

Decision on interlocutory appeal. Questions decided on appeal from an interlocutory decree will not be reconsidered on appeal from the final decree.[59]

Dicta. Mere expressions of opinion, or illustrations respecting matters not actually involved in the decision, have no binding force.[60]

Persons concluded. All parties and privies are bound by the decision on the former appeal.[61]

Particular questions concluded. As a general rule, the doctrine of the law of the case has no application to questions of fact,[62] but applies to all questions of law identical with those on the prior appeal, and on the same facts.[63] Among the questions which have been held to be concluded by the decision on the former appeal are such as relate to the grounds and right of action[64] or of defense;[65] the validity and interpretation of written instruments or contracts;[66] the proper parties;[67] the sufficiency or effect of the verdict;[68] the validity, sufficiency, or effect of the judgment;[69] negligence or contributory negligence;[70] and the amount of recovery or extent of relief.[71]

Where the court, on a prior appeal, has expressly or impliedly decided that it had jurisdiction at that time, it will not reconsider that question on a subsequent appeal.[72] Generally, the court will not pass on the jurisdiction of the lower court where that question was decided either expressly or by implication on a formal appeal.[73] Where the question of jurisdiction was not raised by any of the parties or decided by the court, however, its consideration is not foreclosed by the decision on the former appeal.[74]

Where the sufficiency or insufficiency of a pleading is determined on one appeal, the determination is conclusive when the same question is presented on a subsequent appeal.[75] In passing on the suffi-

Liberal practice
Regardless of the effect of the previous decision, when the trial court's jurisdiction as a federal court is questioned, liberality in practice should be indulged to the end that the question may be determined on subsequent appeal.—Connett v. City of Jerseyville, C.C.A.Ill., 110 F.2d 1015.

ciency of a pleading the appellate court assumes the truth of the allegations and does not pass on the truth of the matters alleged, so that the ruling is not conclusive as to the facts stated therein.[76]

The decision of the court on appeal as to the admissibility of certain evidence in the case is conclusive on a subsequent appeal.[77] On a second appeal the court will not reëxamine evidence, the weight and sufficiency of which, or substantially the same, were passed on on a former appeal, but will adhere to its former ruling.[78] However, the decision on the prior appeal is not conclusive on the second appeal, where the evidence on the second trial was materially different,[79] or where the questions presented on the second appeal were not adjudicated in the prior decision.[80] Similarly, a decision on appeal as to the sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence to warrant submission to the jury is conclusive on a second appeal, where substantially the same evidence was introduced at the second trial,[81] but that rule is inapplicable where the evidence on the second trial was materially different.[82]

§ 298. —— Where Jury Waived

a. In general
b. Trial on agreed statement of facts

a. In General

On appeal to the circuit court of appeals where there has been a waiver of a jury, the questions which are open for review are limited by the statute authorizing a review of the rulings of the court in the progress of the trial and, when the finding is special, of the sufficiency of the facts found to support the judgment.

In an action at law where the parties waive a jury, the power of the circuit court of appeals to review or consider the facts on appeal is extremely limited,[83] and the questions which are open for review are determined by statute.[84] Although this statute has been superseded in so far as it provides for formal exceptions and a bill of exceptions by Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 46, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, which provides that for all purposes for which an exception has heretofore been necessary an objection will suffice, a federal statute, 28 U.S.C.A. § 875, provides that when an issue of fact in any civil cause is tried and determined by the court without the intervention of a jury in accordance with 28 U.S.C.A. § 773 the rulings of the court in the progress of the trial of the cause, if excepted to at the time and duly presented by a bill of exceptions, may be reviewed on appeal, and when the finding is special the review may ex-

84. U.S.—Hirning v. Live Stock Nat. Bank, C.C.A.Iowa, 1 F.2d 307.

In absence of statute there was no question of fact subject to review by the circuit court of appeals, and the only questions of law reviewable were those which related to the record proper, such as whether the pleadings were sufficient to support the judgment.—Campbell v. U. S., Colo., 32 S.Ct. 398, 224 U.S. 99, 56 L. Ed. 684—Bank of Waterproof v. Improperly treating action as one at law

Where action for trespass and for equitable relief was tried in equity, circuit court of appeals improperly treated action as necessarily tried at law after jury waiver, and refused to consider errors assigned.—Twist v. Prairie Oil & Gas Co., Okl., 47 S.Ct. 755, 274 U.S. 684, 71 L.Ed. 1297, reversing, C.C.A., 6 F.2d 347, certiorari granted 46 S.Ct. 355, 270 U.S. 639, 70 L.Ed. 775.

tend to the determination of the sufficiency of the facts found to support the judgment. Under this statute if there was a proper statutory waiver of a jury a review may be had of all questions inherent in the primary record[85] and of all rulings on the trial which were imported into that record by the bill of exceptions, and which were properly challenged;[86] and where the facts are found specially the court may and should determine whether under the pleadings they are sufficient to support the judgment.[87] Review on appeal is confined to the rulings of the court in the progress of the trial if properly presented, and to the question whether the facts specially found support the judgment where there are no rulings on demurrers,[88] or where it is not claimed that any of the findings made by the court are wholly without evidential support, or that the court failed to make a material finding indispensable to the determination of liability under the issues;[89] and where no complaint is made on appeal of rulings during the progress of the trial the review is limited to whether the facts found support the judgment.[90] The sufficiency of the special findings to sustain the judgment is reviewable

Matters apparent of record

(1) A judgment which shows on its face that the only question decided was the construction of a certain statute, on which the judgment was based, is reviewable by the appellate court without exceptions during the trial, a finding other than a general one, or a bill of exceptions.—Maxwell v. Ricks, C.C.A. Wash., 294 F. 255, reversing, D.C., 285 F. 656.

(2) Material facts not specifically embraced in findings of fact may be called to appellate court's attention so far as they appear in record.—U. S. v. Additional facts not found by trial court cannot be considered.—U. S. v. Pennsylvania & Lake Erie Dock Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 272 F. 839.

In determining sufficiency of facts found to support judgment, appellate court will decide for itself nature of so-called ultimate facts or conclusions of law in trial court's findings, and may reject trial court's conclusion that defendant waived certain defenses, unless such conclusion is necessary deduction from facts found by trial court. In action for dishonor of draft drawn under letter of credit, trial court's mixed finding of law and fact that issuing bank's refusal to pay draft on sole ground that goods were below standard waived all other defenses was held binding finding of ultimate facts, where other findings showed that defects in documents might have been remedied and that failure to mention them may have induced holder not to proceed against drawer.—Continental Nat. 89. In absence of claim that a finding is wholly without evidential support, or that the court failed to make a material finding indispensable to the determination of liability under the issues, the circuit court of appeals can go no further than to inquire whether the facts found support the judgment, and whether during the progress of the trial there was error prejudicial to the appellant to which it saved exceptions.—Scandinavian-American Bank of Fargo, N. without an exception whether they were made before or after judgment.[91] The statute relates only to those rulings of law which are made in the course of the trial, and has no application to the preliminary rulings of the district judge made in the exercise of his general authority before the issues are submitted to him for hearing under the statutory stipulation. Such rulings on the pleadings and the sufficiency of the complaint are therefore subject to review as in any other case, independently of the statute.[92] The rulings of the court in the progress of the trial do not include the general findings of the court or the conclusions embodied therein.[93] Nothing is presented for review where the judgment was entered without opinion and without reciting any findings, either general or special, or conclusions of law, and where the record discloses no ruling outside the judgment.[94] Where a jury is waived and a special finding of fact is made by the trial judge, the circuit court of appeals cannot examine the evidence and supply a necessary finding of fact to support the judgment[95] and cannot accept as true facts, relied on by a party, which the trial court did not find and was not requested to find.[96] That special findings do not contain sufficient evidentiary facts to enable the circuit court of appeals to ascertain whether the trial court correctly found the evidentiary facts presents nothing for review.[97] Where a case was transferred to the equity side of the court under stipulation that the jury be waived, the circuit court of appeals considered the case on the record without regard to harmless technical errors.[98]

The circuit court of appeals may review conclusions of law;[99] but under the statute as originally enacted, in order to obtain a review of the Statute giving finding effect of jury verdict

(1) Under a statute which provided that the findings of the trial court have the same effect as the verdict of a jury any question might be reviewed on appeal which might be reviewed if the trial were by jury.—Bank of Waterproof v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, C.C.A.La., 299 F. 478, denying rehearing 297 F. 217, certiorari denied Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. conclusions of law, special findings raising legal propositions were required to be obtained, or propositions of law presented and rulings obtained thereon.[1] However, by virtue of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 52 (a), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, which rule requires the trial court to find the facts specially, and state separately its conclusions of law, requests for findings are not necessary for purposes of review; and this rule supersedes the statutes in so far as they provide for a different method of appellate review.

As shown supra § 297 g (3), under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 52 (a), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, it seems that findings of fact may be set aside if clearly erroneous. Cases decided prior to the effective date of the rules held that, since the statute limits the review to the inquiry whether the special findings support the judgment and whether there were erroneous rulings in the course of the trial, the testimony could not be regarded for any purpose other than as it is involved in such rulings.[2] A finding could be reviewed only in so far as it was unsupported by evidence, or based on erroneous legal theories,[3] but the question whether there was substantial evidence to support the finding and judgment was considered a question of law which could be reviewed if presented to the court during the progress of the trial and a ruling secured or obtained to which there was an exception,[4] and,

Motion held sufficient

In law action to enforce national bank's stockholder's liability, plaintiff's motion, at close of all evidence, for declaration of law and judgment in plaintiff's favor was held sufficient to present questions raised on appeal as to plaintiff's right to recover, although plaintiff did not request special findings of fact. according to the decisions, not otherwise.[5] Either party could by motion present the question of his right to a judgment as a matter of law on the whole evidence, and an adverse ruling on such motion could be reviewed and the entire evidence presented by a bill of exceptions considered by the circuit court of appeals for that purpose.[6] Where the primary facts are either stipulated or established by uncontradicted evidence, and the court, solely from these primary facts, finds an ultimate fact on which the judgment rests, such finding is in the nature of a conclusion of law, and as such is reviewable on appeal to determine whether the primary facts support it.[7] Where the judgment of the trial court was on the merits, the question whether or not there was sufficient evidence to require the submission of

Matters which may be reviewed

(1) In the absence of requests for findings of facts or conclusions of law, the review was limited to questions arising on the pleadings.—Inter-Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Klaber, C.C.A.Mo., 50 F.2d 154—Palmer v. Aeolian Co., C.C.A.Iowa, 46 F.2d 746, certiorari denied 51 S.Ct. 560, 283 U.S. 851, 75 L.Ed. 1458—Akre v. Liberty State Bank of Minneapolis, C.C.A.S.D., 24 F.2d 816.

(2) Where appellant in law case tried by court made no request for special findings of fact or conclusions of law, and did not challenge sufficiency or lack of evidence by demurrer, only question open to review was whether judgment was sustained by pleadings, findings, and conclusions.—Gerlach v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., C.C.A.Iowa, 65 F.2d 862.

(3) But where questions of fact were undisputed and court was fully apprised of litigant's position and that counsel vigorously opposed adverse ruling, court was authorized to review evidence, notwithstanding neither findings nor requests for findings were made.—Muentzer v. Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank, C.C. A.Ind., 3 F.2d 222, 224, overruling Raymer v. Netherwood, Wis., 257 F. 284, 168 C.C.A. 368.

(4) Request for findings of fact setting out fully proposed findings claimed to have been proved and conclusions of law logically following therefrom, when read together sufficiently raise question.—People's Loan & Investment Co. v. Universal Credit Co., C.C.A.Ark., 75 F.2d 545.

Question held not presented by mere assertion that judgment was erroneous as contrary to facts or as not supported by competent evidence, or that court erred in entering findings.—Anderson v. U. S., C. C.A.Mo., 65 F.2d 870.

Case submitted on stipulation and testimony

Where an action at law was submitted to the district judge on a stipulation as to certain facts and the testimony of one witness, and a general judgment was entered without special findings of fact, the circuit court of appeals was limited to an inquiry as to whether there was any evidence in the record that would support the judgment and an examination of such errors of law as were properly presented or apparent on the record.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. the case to a jury, had there been a jury, is not reviewable.[8]

By the express terms of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 52 (a), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, which supersedes statutes providing a different method of finding facts, in all actions tried on the facts without a jury the court is required to find the facts specially. Under the statute, 28 U.S.C.A. § 875, set out above, if the finding is general, the only matters reviewable are the sufficiency of the complaint and the rulings made during the progress of the trial properly presented by exceptions;[9] and, where there are no exceptions to rulings of the court in the progress of the trial, only rulings on the pleadings and their sufficiency are open to review.[10] Where the assignments of error present no point based on the pleadings and the bills of exceptions disclose no special findings of fact or propositions of law duly presented, there is nothing to review, and the judgment will be affirmed.[11] The circuit court of appeals cannot inquire into the facts or conclusions of law if the finding is general[12] or if there is not a special finding of facts,[13] and, although it seems that the rule has been modified somewhat by the provisions of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 46, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, under which formal exceptions and a bill of exceptions are no longer required, it was formerly held in such case that the general finding of the trial court was conclusive on all matters of fact and prevented any inquiry into the conclusions of law embodied therein except in so far as the rulings were excepted to and duly preserved by bill of exception.[14] The foregoing principles apply notwith-

Effect of constitutional provision
The statutory provision that the finding of the court shall have the same effect as the verdict of a jury brings such findings within the constitutional rule that "no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise reëxamined in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law," and thus cuts off the right to review such findings on the facts.

Rulings or exceptions "in the progress of the trial." By the terms of the statute the reviewing court will not consider an alleged error in the rulings of the court unless the request was made therefor and its refusal excepted to "in the progress of the trial."[16] A trial is still in progress within the meaning of the statute until the case is submitted to the trial judge for final determination;[17] and a ruling or an exception is "in the progress of the trial" within the statute when made before announcement of the opinion or entry of the judgment of the court[18] but is too late if made after judgment,[19] even though the trial judge after judgment granted leave to make the request.[20] Rulings made and exceptions thereto taken after submission of the case and after announcement by the court of its opinion and intended judgment, but before rendition of the final judgment are generally held not made "in the progress of the trial."[21] However, the progress of the trial is not ended by such an announcement where the parties evidently understood that the cause was still in progress of trial,[22] particularly where there is a rule of court that the rendition of the decision or opinion should be deemed and entered as merely a preliminary order for judgment,[23] the statute and rule being intended to insure orderly and timely presentation to the judge of matters deemed important in advance of any definite action by him with respect to them and subject to construction accordingly;[24] and a like rule applies where the trial court agreed to hold final disposition of the case open after announcing its decision

Error held properly presented

In law action tried without jury, where trial court admitted certain evidence offered by defendant, reserving ruling on plaintiff's objection thereto, and in subsequent written opinion ruled in effect that evidence was inadmissible and had not been considered in making of general finding, and defendant promptly filed new trial motion presenting alleged erroneous ruling of law respecting admissibility of evidence and motion was overruled, to which ruling defendant properly saved exception, error in such ruling was held properly presented by defendant, although neither party requested special findings of fact.—English v. so as to permit a party to take additional steps.[25] An exception that special findings are not supported by any evidence, taken before final action by the trial court, is an exception to rulings made "in the progress of the trial."[26] The right granted by the statute to a review of the rulings made during the progress of the trial is not lost because of the fact that a general finding or special findings sufficient apparently to support the judgment are thereafter made by the court.[27]

Waiver not conforming to statute. It is provided by Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 38 (d), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, that the failure of a party to serve and file a written demand for a jury trial constitutes a waiver of such trial. As affects review, it was formerly required by statute that the waiver be by written stipulation or by oral agreement of which record was made.[28] Where a jury was not duly waived in accordance with the requirement of the statute, and evidence was introduced and submitted to the court, there was no matter of fact which the circuit court of appeals could review[29] and no question of law could be reviewed except those arising on the process, pleadings, or judgment.[30] None of the questions decid-

28. Requirements under various statutes

(1) By act of May 29, 1930, 46 U.S. St. at L. p 486, written waiver was unnecessary and the recitation in the judgment that a jury was waived was sufficient.—Baker Ice Mach. Co. v. Hebert, C.C.A.Neb., 76 F.2d 73—Jack v. Forrest, C.C.A.Utah, 71 F.2d 264, certiorari granted Forrest v. Jack, 55 S.Ct. 95, 293 U.S. 542, 79 L. Ed. 647, reversed on other grounds 55 S.Ct. 370, 294 U.S. 158, 79 L.Ed. 829, 96 A.L.R. 1457, rehearing denied 55 S.Ct. 543, 294 U.S. 733, 79 L.Ed. 1262.

(2) Prior to that time, in an action at law, the full review authorized by the statute was permissible only when it affirmatively appeared by the record that the waiver of the right to jury trial was in writing.—City of Cleveland v. Walsh Const. Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 279 F. 57, affirming, D.C., Walsh Const. Co. v. City of Cleveland, 271 F. 701—35 C.J. p 203 note 22 [a] (2).

(3) A case was tried by the court without a jury under written stipulation waiving the jury within the statute where the cause was on written stipulation referred to a referee to hear and report and the judge on the coming in of the report adopted the findings of the referee as his own after an examination of the evidence.—Thompson-Starrett Co. v. La Belle Iron Works, C.C.A.N.Y., 17 F.2d 536, certiorari denied 47 S.Ct. 763, 274 U.S. 748, 71 L.Ed. 1330.

(4) But this rule did not apply where the consent to the reference was not by written stipulation.—Thompson-Starrett Co. v. La Belle Iron Works, supra.

(5) Where the right to jury trial was waived in writing and the case submitted to a referee, the rulings or legal conclusions of the referee could not be directly reviewed on writ of error to the judgment; but if the trial judge proceeded under an applicable state, or stipulated practice, his rulings reviewing those of the referee became subject to review; and where the referee's findings were final, as under the common-law practice, or if the judge by adoption or otherwise made his own findings, the findings were part of the primary record opening for review the question whether they supported the judgment. Where the written stipulation could be construed as providing for complete arbitration before the referee, the referee's findings, whether construed as final or not, after their confirmation by the court could be reviewed to the extent of determining whether they support the judgment.—City of Cleveland v. Walsh Const. Co., supra.

(6) A statement in the trial court's opinion that the jury was waived was not a sufficient compliance with the statute.—Municipal Excavator Co. v. Siedhoff, C.C.A.Kan., 15 F.2d 10.

(7) Where action was legal and not equitable and defendant, after joining in request for equity trial, proceeded without objection and after decree requested trial court to treat agreement for equity trial as one waiving trial by jury, appellate court would treat trial as trial at law without jury.—Atlantic Tank & Barrel Corporation v. McClendon, C. C.A.Ky., 81 F.2d 797.

ed at the trial could be reviewed in such case.[31] Hence the court would not review the testimony[32] or alleged error in admitting or excluding testimony,[33] or the denial of a motion for a directed verdict.[34] An appeal would not be dismissed on the ground that a written waiver of jury was not filed before trial of the case where after the trial such a waiver was signed with a stipulation that it should be filed and effective as of the date of the trial.[35]

b. Trial on Agreed Statement of Facts

Where a case is submitted on an agreed statement of the ultimate facts, the question whether the facts are sufficient to support the judgment is open to review.

If the parties stipulate as to the ultimate facts, it in effect amounts to a special finding of facts by the court or a jury,[36] and the question whether the facts are sufficient to support the judgment is open to review[37] although neither a finding nor declaration of law is requested.[38] An agreed statement of fact or special findings, the sufficiency of which to support the judgment presents a reviewable question of law, must, however, be of the ultimate, as distinguished from the evidentiary, facts;[39] and

Where action is tried without jury and without statutory waiver, or special findings, or bill of exception, appellate court can consider only questions arising on process, pleadings, or judgment.—Twist v. Prairie Oil & Gas Co., Okl., 47 S.Ct. 755, 274 U.S. 684, 71 L.Ed. 1297, reversing, C.C.A., 6 F.2d 347, certiorari granted 46 S.Ct. 355, 270 U.S. 639, 70 L.Ed. 775.

Primary record

If the statute is not complied with in waiving jury trial, there can be no review of any question not arising on primary record.—Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Board of Education of District of Beaver Pond, in Mercer County, W.Va., C.C.A.W. Va., 15 F.2d 317—City of Cleveland v. Walsh Const. Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 279 F. 57, affirming, D.C., Walsh Const. Co. v. Trial before referee

Where the waiver of a jury trial is not in writing, cases tried before referee cannot be reviewed and bill of exceptions and recitals of evidence are ineffective; but the findings of the referee or judge have the same character and effect as in the case of written waiver.—City of Cleveland v. Findings equivalent to agreed statement of facts

Where counsel for appellant or plaintiff in error in the appellate court admit that the findings of fact made by the trial court are sustained by the evidence, such findings will be treated as in effect an agreed statement of facts.—Philadelphia Casualty Co. v. Fechheimer, Ohio, 220 F. 401, 136 C.C.A. 25, Ann.Cas.1917D 64.

"Ultimate facts" include all facts necessary in order that determination of rights of parties shall become question of law.—U. S. v. Smith, C.C. A.Mass., 39 F.2d 851, affirming, D. C., 32 F.2d 901.

where the agreed statement was of the evidentiary, and not the ultimate, facts, the sufficiency of the statement to support the judgment cannot be reviewed.[40]

§ 299. —— General and Special Findings

The opinion of the trial judge is generally not a special finding for purposes of review, although special findings may be embodied in the opinion; but refusals of findings may constitute special findings. The exercise of the lower court's discretion with respect to the making or refusal of findings is not reviewable.

Whether the finding of the court was general or special in an action in which there has been a waiver of a jury is a circumstance which, as shown supra § 298, may affect the scope of the review on appeal to the circuit court of appeals. The opinion of the trial judge dealing generally with issues of law and fact and giving the reasons for his conclusions is not a special finding of fact for the purposes of review,[41] although special findings may be made part of the opinion[42] or set forth at the end of the opinion.[43] Refusals of findings requested on undisputed evidence constitute special findings within the rule authorizing the appellate court to determine the sufficiency of facts specially found to support the judgment.[44] It is immaterial, on appeal, whether the finding of the ultimate fact is in the "findings of fact" or in the so-called "conclusions of law;"[45] and the concluding statement in special findings that plaintiff was entitled to damages in a specified amount does not constitute a general finding that will nullify the special findings.[46] The making of special findings being discretionary with the trial court, its action in making such findings,[47] in refusing to make requested findings,[48] or its action in refusing to amend findings

Evidentiary facts

Stipulation of facts and specific findings was held to disclose evidentiary, rather than ultimate, facts, precluding review, in absence of exceptions.—Perry v. Wiggins, C.C.A. Mo., 57 F.2d 622, certiorari denied 53 S.Ct. 12, 287 U.S. 609, 77 L.Ed. 529.

§ 300. Hearing and Rehearing

a. Hearing
b. Rehearing

a. Hearing

Several cases growing out of the same transaction may be heard together on appeal. The court may for good cause continue the hearing or excuse failure of counsel to appear for argument, and will in other respects conduct the appeal in accordance with the requirements of good practice.

Several cases which have been brought to the circuit court of appeals for review may be consolidated and heard together, where they all grow out of the same transaction and depend on the same facts or principles, and the consolidation appears to be the course most convenient, expeditious, or inexpensive to the parties.[51] The court may continue or postpone the hearing of the appeal for good cause shown,[52] such as illness of counsel,[53] and may impose terms as a condition of such postponement.[54] The court will not appoint counsel to represent a party who was allowed to prosecute the appeal as a pauper where examination of the record convinces the court that such action would be futile.[55] The court may for good reason at the hearing excuse failure of counsel to appear for argument of the appeal, although it is better practice for counsel to secure by formal petition prior leave of the court to submit the case on briefs without oral argument.[56] Appellant's brief in the district court not in record on appeal should not be referred to in the argument of appellee's counsel.[57] An appeal from an interlocutory decision is entitled to precedence as provided for by statute.[58]

b. Rehearing

(1) Power to grant and nature of right
(2) Grounds for rehearing
(3) Application for rehearing
(4) Scope and conduct of hearing and relief granted

(1) Power to Grant and Nature of Right

A rehearing in the circuit court of appeals is not a matter of right, applications therefor being addressed to the discretion of the court.

A rehearing in the circuit court of appeals is not a matter of right, but a privilege given by the court, and governed and limited by its rules;[59] and applications for rehearing are addressed solely to the discretion of the court.[60]

(2) Grounds for Rehearing

Generally a party is entitled to a rehearing only because of some manifest error or omission which is so material that, if corrected, it should result in a substantial change in the original opinion; and a mere failure sufficiently to present the cause on the original hearing affords no ground for a rehearing, nor can a rehearing be had on account of matters different from those urged on the original hearing.

Generally a party will be entitled to a rehearing only because of some manifest error or omission which is so material that, if it is corrected, it should result in a substantial alteration or change in the original opinion.[61] This means that a rehearing will usually be refused if no material fact or principle of law has been overlooked or disregarded,[62] or if it is not made to appear that a rehearing could change the result.[63] If no omissions or new authorities or points of law or fact are shown, the appellate court will seldom permit a rehearing simply for the purpose of obtaining a reargument on, and a reconsideration of, points, authorities, and matters which have already been fully considered by the court, on the assertion of counsel that, notwithstanding the court fully considered everything wished to be urged on the rehearing, it reached the wrong conclusion.[64] A rehearing may be granted because of the disqualification of one member of the original court not known at the time of the first hearing of the appeal.[65] A rehearing will be granted by the circuit court of appeals where its decision is in conflict with a case previously decided by the highest court of the state, the law of which controls, or where the latter court renders such an adverse decision pending the determination of the case at bar or immediately after it has been decided;[66] and, on the subsequent discovery of a decision of the state court in point, a rehearing will be granted where the decision of the circuit court of appeals was made under the belief that there was no relevant state statute or decision.[67] A rehearing will not be granted solely because questions of great importance are involved.[68] Moreover, if a judgment is not final, a rehearing will be refused, although it was rendered by a divided court.[69]

Generally the failure of counsel sufficiently to present the cause for the determination of the appellate court furnishes no ground for a rehearing,[70] and the mere fact that the court has overlooked a certain point presented by the record is not sufficient to authorize a rehearing, unless it further appears that its attention was called to the point in question by the briefs or arguments of counsel.[71] A rehearing, however, will be granted if the court has overlooked material points or decisive authorities duly submitted by counsel.[72]

Where an appeal has been heard and determined on a certain theory, a rehearing cannot be had on grounds inconsistent with that theory.[73]

As a general rule, points which have been waived on the hearing, either expressly or by implication, will not be considered on a petition for a rehearing,[74] and a rehearing cannot ordinarily be had on

Controlling law

Where case had been tried and heard on appeal on erroneous assumption that it was controlled by general law, instead of by state law, rehearing would not be granted, but reversal and remandment were permitted to stand in order that case might be tried anew under state law, especially where case presented special difficulties.—Brabham v. account of matters or questions different from those urged at the original hearing by the party seeking the rehearing.[75] The reasons against granting a rehearing in such cases apply with particular force where the matters suggested ought to have been urged in the trial court before the appeal was taken.[76] Nevertheless the court may consider such matters in view of the interesting character of the problems presented and the petitioner's insistence that the judgment rendered was unconscionable.[77]

The death of a party pending appeal is not usually a ground for a rehearing.[78]

(3) Application for Rehearing

A petition for rehearing can be maintained only by one whose interests are affected by the judgment. It should set out the grounds on which it is based and specify in what respect the original decision was erroneous. It must be made and filed within the time prescribed by statute and rules of court.

Generally a petition or application for rehearing cannot be maintained by one whose interests are not affected or prejudiced by the judgment,[79] but a rehearing will be granted to avoid possible injustice to a petitioner who would be affected by the decree appealed from even though he was not named therein, where, had he then asked, he would have been heard when the appeals were originally argued, it appearing that he had no record notice of the appeals.[80] Where one not previously a party to the action takes steps in reliance on the decision of the circuit court of appeals before expiration of the term of court or of the time allowed for granting certiorari, such party's interest is subject to the outcome of the action, and his motion for leave to file a petition in intervention in the nature of a petition for rehearing after the judgment of the appellate court is set aside on petition for rehearing will be overruled.[81]

The application should set forth fully and concisely the grounds on which it is based, and point out specifically in what respect the original decision is erroneous.[82] In stating the facts, however, the petition should not proceed to give further reasons in support of the case made in the original brief, and an application which is in form a mere argument or brief cannot be considered by the court.[83] The petition may be accompanied by a certificate of counsel,[84] but affidavits and drawings not presented in the district court are incompetent to support the petition.[85] A petition for a rehearing and affidavits in answer and reply are entirely irregular as documents for submission in connection with a motion for rehearing where there is nothing properly before the circuit court of appeals except the record on appeal, although such documents may be considered as upon an application for leave to file a petition in the district court to reopen the case and to remand the cause to that court for further proceedings.[86] A petition not made in accord with the recognized code of professional manners cannot be filed.[87]

87. U.S.—Wenborne-Karpen Dryer Co. v. Cutler Dry Kiln Co., C.C.A. N.Y., 292 F. 861, denying petitions

Where, after a dismissal for want of jurisdiction in the circuit court of appeals, the jurisdictional defect was apparently remedied and the parties expressed a desire that the case be disposed of on the merits, the appellate court may consider the legal questions presented on the merits but need not allow the petition for rehearing.[88]

Time for filing application or granting rehearing. An application for rehearing ordinarily may and must be made and filed within the time prescribed by statutes or court rules.[89] As a general rule the petition must be filed before the end of the term at which the case is decided, and a failure to make the application within this period is fatal,[90] but the court may grant leave to file a petition after expiration of the term where the rules of the court do not expressly forbid it from entertaining petitions after the term.[91] The time for applying for a rehearing may be extended by the court for good cause.[92] The circuit court of appeals may not grant a rehearing after mandate has issued[93] or after the expiration of the term at which judgment was rendered,[94] unless jurisdiction be retained over the cause in some appropriate manner for the purpose,[95] even though with respect to proceedings brought to enforce or set aside its order the court occupies the position of a court of original jurisdiction rather than of an appellate court.[96]

Second petition. Although the rules of the court do not contemplate a second petition for rehearing, one may be granted because of an alleged conflict within the circuit of decisions rendered by the court.[97]

(4) Scope and Conduct of Hearing and Relief Granted

Except where the application was based on particular errors, a petitioner may urge any point which was in the case at all times; and if the court concludes that its original decision was erroneous such decision may be modified or reversed.

A petitioner will not ordinarily be denied the right to urge on rehearing a point which was in the case at all times,[98] but if the application was based on particular errors in the original judgment, or if the court in granting the rehearing has limited it to a certain portion of the case, other points cannot be considered and should not be raised on the reargument.[99] Under a rule of the circuit court of

§ 301. Determination; Liability on Bonds

a. Determination and disposition of cause
b. Liabilities on bonds and undertakings

a. Determination and Disposition of Cause

(1) In general
(2) Remand without decision
(3) Effect of changes pending appeal
(4) Findings of fact and conclusions of law
(5) Affirmance
(6) Modification
(7) Reversal
(8) Amendment, modification, and setting aside of its judgment by circuit court of appeals
(9) Mandate and proceedings in lower court
(10) Jurisdiction and proceedings of appellate court after remand

(1) In General

The circuit court of appeals has broad power to affirm, modify, or reverse any judgment brought before it for review, or to direct such judgment to be entered or such further proceedings to be had as justice may require, but the court should not grant relief beyond its jurisdiction.

By virtue of the act establishing the circuit court of appeals, the court is vested with power to affirm, modify, or reverse any judgment, decree, or order lawfully brought before it for review, or to direct such judgment, decree, or order to be rendered, or such further proceedings to be had by the inferior court as the justice of the case may require.[4] Criminal cases are included within the power granted by the statute.[5] The duty of the court extends no further than to determine the issues raised by the appeal and to direct the entry of the judgment; it cannot anticipate what action a party may take or refuse to take in view of the judicial determination of the issue presented.[6] Moreover, the circuit court of appeals may not retry an action at law and render such judgment as it thinks should be rendered,[7] although on an equity appeal the court may enter such decree as the proof warrants.[8] Where the record does not show jurisdiction in the federal court, the submission of the case will be set aside, and the case replaced on the calendar, with permission to counsel to suggest a diminution of the record and bring up the necessary parts of the record that may show jurisdiction.[9] Where the question has become moot, the court may refuse to render a decision.[10] It is the practice of the circuit court of appeals to base its decision on more than one ground where the record shows there are more existing in favor of the litigant who prevails on appeal.[11] The court has jurisdiction to effectuate its own decree.[12]

12. U.S.—National Labor Relations Board v. Stackpole Carbon Co., C. C.A., 128 F.2d 188, supplementing opinion 105 F.2d 167, certiorari de-

Leaving out of consideration the ordinary case of a new trial awarded after a judgment has been reversed, the circuit court of appeals is without power to confer original jurisdiction on, or restore lost jurisdiction to, the district court with respect to a new trial after the term.[13] There is no fixed rule governing the granting of leave to apply to the lower court for further relief,[14] and the court will refuse to grant it where a proper case therefor is not presented.[15]

It is a general rule that the court will not grant relief to a party who has not appealed or complained in the mode provided by law of the judgment or decree;[16] but the court may act sua sponte on behalf of a person who is deprived of a right and is not served with process and does not appear.[17] An appeal will not be dismissed, however, on the ground that it was not taken by anyone authorized to appear for appellant.[18] Where defendant has once been dismissed from a cause of action in the district court, the circuit court of appeals has no power to set aside the dismissal and render judgment against him.[19]

Preparatory to its decisions a circuit court of appeals may ask instructions from the supreme court.[20] When a question of jurisdiction is certified by the circuit court of appeals to the supreme court, it is proper to reserve decision meanwhile on the other questions,[21] but a circuit court of appeals is not bound to withhold a decision of other questions presented, because on one out of many it desires the opinion of the supreme court.[22]

The rule, discussed supra §§ 170–187, as to following decisions of the highest court of a state in matters of local law applies in cases of the review of decisions of the supreme court of Puerto Rico[23] and of the review of decisions of the supreme

Appointment of counsel

Where petitioner in habeas corpus proceeding, claiming he was allowed to appeal in forma pauperis, and moving for appointment of counsel to represent him on appeal without having obtained certificate of probable cause for appeal, was held under process of state court and question raised involved interpretation of state law, and his remedy lay in appeal to supreme court from state court decision, circuit court of appeals would not appoint counsel even if such certificate was no longer required under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U.S.C.A., following § 723c.—Schenk v. Plummer, C.C.A. Cal., 113 F.2d 726, first case.

Necessity of cross appeal

(1) In a suit by a contractor's surety for exoneration and specific performance of an agreement as to the use of payments under the contract, where the district court, finding that the surety had broken the contract and impliedly finding that the breach was substantial, denied specific performance but granted exoneration by requiring a payment to be deposited as a special trust fund for the payment of bills for labor and materials. the circuit court of appeals, on an appeal by the contractor with no cross appeal by the surety, could not set aside the decree and direct the entry of a decree for specific performance on a finding that the surety's breach was unsubstantial. (2) Where plaintiff took voluntary nonsuit without prejudice, and subsequently appealed from judgment for defendant on cross action of defendant and defendant did not bring a cross appeal, circuit court of appeals could do nothing which would affect a subsequent suit by plaintiff in its original demand.—Eastern States Petroleum Co. v. Circuit courts of appeal will follow insular courts when construing local statutes, especially where statute involves property rights, unless clearly wrong; but where insular statute involves personal rights and liberty, circuit courts of appeal will not adopt construction by local courts if apparently erroneous.—Martinez v. Decision on consent or stipulation. It is generally permissible for the court to render its decision on the consent or stipulation of the parties to the cause that the judgment be reversed.[27]

Double appeals. Where, pending an appeal from an interlocutory order, a final order in the same case is affirmed, the only order that need be made on the appeal from the interlocutory decree is that the order has been superseded by the final decree.[28]

Decision by divided court. Where a majority, or other required number, of the judges agree to affirm the judgment of the lower court, it is not material that their conclusions are based on different reasons.[29]

(2) Remand without Decision

The circuit court of appeals has power to remand a case without decision, and will do so in a proper case to enable the court below to determine certain issues or make specific findings, or to enable a party to move for a new trial or amend his pleadings.

The circuit court of appeals has power without determining and disposing of the cause to remand it to the lower court for further proceedings, where the record is not in condition for the appellate court properly to decide the questions presented with justice to all parties concerned,[30] or where the case has been tried on a wrong theory.[31] Thus in a proper case the appellate court may remand for the purpose of determining certain issues or questions,[32] such as the jurisdiction of the court,[33] or to enable appellant to move for a new trial on the ground of new evidence discovered after the taking of the appeal.[34] Where the district court has failed to comply with the rule requiring that court to make specific findings of fact, the circuit court of appeals may remand the case in order that such findings may be made,[35] but it need not do so, and can consider the merits where general findings of

Plaintiff's motion to set aside an order dismissing action on ground that plaintiff's then attorney had no authority to dismiss the action on merits, and that plaintiff had just learned that without such authority his attorney's action was improper, was properly denied, where record showed that order dismissing action on merits was made, not on consent of plaintiff's attorney, but over his protest, and case will be remanded with directions to dismiss the motion for want of jurisdiction.—De Filippis v. Jurisdiction after expiration of term

After dismissal and remand on appeal, on discovery of new evidence, the decree being interlocutory, the district court is not deprived of power to set aside its decree and reopen the case because a term expired while the appeal was pending.—Wagner v. the trial court clearly indicate the basis for its decision.[36] However, the failure of the district court to find a fact essential to a party's recovery cannot be supplied by the appellate court even if the latter thinks the evidence in the record warrants it.[37] Where, except for the pendency of an appeal from a judgment of dismissal, the district court has power to allow an amendment to the complaint, plaintiff may move in the circuit court of appeals to dismiss the appeals and thereby reinstate the district court's jurisdiction, or, in the alternative, the appellate court may, on request from the trial court, remand the case,[38] but in the absence of such motion or request, the circuit court of appeals has no power to vacate the judgment and remand the case so that plaintiff can present a motion for leave to file an amended complaint.[39]

(3) Effect of Changes pending Appeal

Generally the circuit court of appeals will decide the case in accordance with the law existing at the time of its own decision, but with respect to the facts will confine itself to the state of the case at the time the judgment of the lower court was rendered. The rule is not without exceptions, however.

The appellate court must generally decide and dispose of the case in accordance with the law existing at the time of its own decision.[40] Thus, although the decision of the district court was correct in view of the law as announced by other decisions at the time it was entered, it must be reversed if incorrect under later decisions when reached on appeal.[41] As respects the standing of parties as appellants from an order of the district court pursuant to mandate from the circuit court of appeals, the circuit court of appeals is required to take note of and give effect to the changed situation brought about by the supreme court's reversal of the decision of the circuit court of appeals, notwithstanding the order was appealed from before the decision was reversed.[42]

Generally the appellate court, in considering the correctness of the judgment below, will confine itself to the state of the case at the time such judgment was rendered and will not consider any facts arising subsequently,[43] but a change of conditions by reason of which the case has become moot may be properly considered although not appearing on the record;[44] and where the ends of justice may be best subserved thereby, the case may be remanded to permit the parties to file amended or supplementary pleadings alleging matters occurring pending the appeal,[45] although this relief will be denied where the facts sought to be set forth in the proposed new pleading would authorize no different relief from that sought in the original pleading.[46] Where, pending review of a judgment which correctly sustained a plea of res judicata, the judgment which was the basis of such plea was reversed by the court in which the appeal was pending, that court will take cognizance of its own action, and, considering the changes in fact and in law which have supervened, will reverse the judgment, al-

Dismissal without prejudice

Where denial of defendants' motion to restrain plaintiff from further prosecution of cause was based on decision of another district court in a proceeding between the same parties, and that decision was reversed after denial of motion, dismissal of appeal from nonappealable order of denial would be without prejudice to entertaining of renewed motions for stay of proceedings based on changes of the law with respect to the other litigation.—Triangle Conduit & Cable Co. v. Jurisdiction of appellate court

though finding no error therein.[47]

(4) Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law

The circuit court of appeals does not make findings of fact in an action at law, but may do so on an equity appeal.

In an action at law, the circuit court of appeals does not make findings of fact.[48] On an equity appeal where no findings of fact or insufficient findings are made in the court of first instance, the circuit court of appeals has power either to send the case back for further disposition, in accordance with the rule stated supra § 301 a (2), or to make findings itself and decree accordingly,[49] and will pursue the latter course where both parties had full opportunity to present all their material evidence and did present proof sufficient for a finding.[50] On appeal from an order granting a temporary injunction to preserve the status quo pending final hearing, the appellate court will not find facts or lay down rulings of law.[51]

(5) Affirmance
(a) On motion
(b) On hearing

(a) On Motion

A motion to affirm the judgment may be granted on a showing of proper grounds therefor.

The appellate court may affirm, on motion, the judgment of the lower court for want of prosecution of the appeal,[52] or, on appeal from the overruling of defenses propounded by traverse to scire facias, on the ground that the defenses were wholly without merit and that the appeal was taken for purposes only of delay.[53] A decree may be affirmed for want of a statement of evidence prepared and certified as required by rule of court,[54] but a court which has been uniformly indulgent with respect to transgressions of such a rule abuses its discretion in affirming a decree for failure to observe it.[55]

(b) On Hearing
aa. Grounds and effect of affirmance
bb. Conditional affirmance
cc. Rendering final judgment or directing further proceedings

aa. Grounds and Effect of Affirmance

The judgment of the lower court will be affirmed where there are no reversible errors, but an affirmance is not necessarily an adoption of the reasoning of the court below, and an affirmance based on the absence of certain necessary conditions is not conclusive on the parties' rights when such conditions afterward come into existence.

The judgment of the lower court will be affirmed where there is no error,[56] where on the whole record it appears that the merits of the cause have been fairly tried and determined, and that substantial justice has been done by the judgment of the trial court,[57] where the error is not prejudicial,[58] where a reversal would be ineffectual or would not be beneficial,[59] as where the questions involved have become moot,[60] where the errors are not sufficiently reserved or presented,[61] or where the assignments of error are not substantial.[62] However, before the rule will be applied that the judgment of the lower court will be affirmed despite errors occurring at the trial, where a reversal would be fruitless, it must be clearly apparent that no other result could be reached on a second trial; if there is any doubt about the matter, the rule is not applicable.[63] A judgment of dismissal for want of jurisdiction must be affirmed where the record fails to show jurisdiction.[64]

Effect of affirmance. By its affirmance, a judgment of the district court becomes, in effect, a judgment of the circuit court of appeals,[65] but an affirmance is not necessarily an adoption of the reasoning of the lower court,[66] unless the appellate court expressly affirms "on the opinion below."[67] An affirmance of a judgment based on the ground that certain necessary conditions did not exist is not conclusive of the rights of the parties where such conditions afterward come into existence.[68] The affirmance on appeal of a preliminary injunction issued to restrain the enforcement of a rate ordinance does not deprive the trial court of liberty to revise its conclusion on a proper showing.[69] Affirmance of a decree requiring defendant to perform a contract, on appeal without supersedeas, reaches back to the inception of the agreement and finally adjudicates defendant's obligation to perform.[70]

bb. Conditional Affirmance

Unliquidated damages

In personal injury or other actions for unliquidated damages where the verdict is excessive and there is no other error requiring reversal, the court will affirm the judgment on the entry by plaintiff of a remittitur of that part of his recovery which the court deems excessive.—Hazard Powder Co. v. Volger, Wyo., 58 F. 152, 7 C.C.A. 130.

Interest

Where a judgment is excessive in the matter of interest but is proper in every other respect and the amount of the excess can be ascertained by calculation, it may be remitted and the judgment be allowed to stand for the residue.—B. F. Sturtevant Co. v. Champion Fibre Co., Ohio, 232 F. 1, 146 C.C.A. 193—4 C.J. p 1141 note 89.

the excess of the judgment appealed from is merely a matter of computation and does not involve a determination of a disputed question of fact;[72] and the practice is commended by the courts on the ground that it saves the time and expense attendant on a new trial.[73] In the absence of a clear showing that the verdict is excessive, the reviewing court is hesitant to order a remittitur,[74] and will not ordinarily do so where it is not apparent from the record what the amount of the excess is and for what amount the correct judgment should be,[75] or where there is no mathematical basis by which that portion of the verdict which was due to the erroneous element can be computed, or at least closely approximated.[76] A remittitur will not be allowed where the verdict and judgment based thereon are wholly outside the issues in that they award damages on a theory wholly at variance with the allegations of the complaint.[77] The court cannot take the place of the jury, and if the condition fixed by the court seems unjust, the party can protect himself by declining to accept it.[78] A remittitur cannot be entered after the expiration of the time allowed therefor.[79] On affirmance after remittitur, the circuit court of appeals cannot add interest from the date of the rendition of the services forming the subject matter of the action to the date of the entry of judgment, when plaintiff did not ask for such interest in his complaint.[80]

cc. Rendering Final Judgment or Directing Further Proceedings

In a proper case the circuit court of appeal in affirming may render final judgment or remand the case for further proceedings.

Where the cause is not ripe for final disposition, on affirmance the reviewing court may remand the cause for final disposition thereof or further proceedings therein.[81] Where plaintiff does not have a cause of action, on affirmance of an order sustaining a demurrer to the petition, the case should not be remanded with leave to amend.[82] In an action to recover excessive payments, where defendant had offered no proof of the amount of an alleged set-off, the circuit court of appeals affirming the judgment for plaintiff would not remand the cause in order that the district court might determine the amount of credits to be deducted.[83] On affirmance of an order discharging an order to show cause why a judgment should not be opened, the time for execution of a writ of execution, levy under which was stayed pending the appeal, should be extended for a sufficient time to allow the marshal to execute it.[84] The circuit court of appeals has power, either as a matter of substantive right under the state law or as a matter of procedure under federal statute and court rule, to add damages for delay to a judgment which it affirms on being satisfied that the appeal was without merit and ap-

Judgment exceeding damages proved
Where the judgment, or the verdict on which the judgment is based, is in excess of the damages proved and the evidence clearly shows the amount for which judgment should have been rendered, the judgment may be affirmed on condition that plaintiff remit the excessive part of his recovery.—Gulf States Creosoting Co. v. Loving, C.C.A.N.C., 120 F.2d 195.

parently taken merely for delay.[85] The court cannot add to a judgment affirming a judgment enjoining the seizure of property under state law a provision that defendants may apply to the lower court for a further order or decree if the state supreme court holds the statute valid and applicable to the conditions shown, where no case involving such issue is pending in such court.[86] On appeal from an order granting a preliminary injunction, the court cannot enter a decree for complainant on the merits unless it can see that the whole issues can be disposed of at once without injustice to the parties.[87]

(6) Modification

The circuit court of appeals has power, in a proper case, to modify or correct the judgment or order appealed from, or remand the case to the lower court for correction.

The circuit court of appeals has power to modify or correct the judgment, order, or decree appealed from,[88] or remand the case to the lower court for correction.[89] The power to modify is generally the power to render such judgment as the lower court should have rendered, where the appellate court is in possession of all the facts and evidence or otherwise occupies the same position as the trial court.[90] On appeals in equity cases, the higher court has somewhat broader powers of review than on appeals in actions at law tried before a jury, and further it generally has the benefit of findings of fact made by the trial court. Accordingly, on such an appeal, where the court can see from the record what the rights of the parties are, it not only has the power to render such a decree as ought to have been rendered below, without remanding the case,[91] but it is also held to be its duty to do so.[92] The court cannot reform a judgment where the right to appeal has been forfeited,[93] or where the record is insufficient to show clearly what judgment should have been rendered by the lower court.[94] A defendant against whom a preliminary injunction was ordered will be presumed to agree

Change of conditions pending appeal

Where conditions have changed pending an appeal from an order of the federal district court, the circuit court of appeals, with the consent of the parties, has the authority to modify the order.—In re Miller, C.C.A.N.Y., 281 F. 764, appeal dismissed Schaefer v. Miller, 43 S.Ct. 519, 262 U.S. 760, 67 L.Ed. 1220.

Stipulation of parties

Where both parties to appeal, in effect, agreed that trial court's decree providing that depositions taken and filed in case and exhibits identified in depositions and filed could be used in any action in district court wherein defendant and plaintiff or their customers or privies were parties should be construed as meaning that depositions and exhibits could be used only in suits relating to same subject matter as instant case, circuit court of appeals would consider that parties had stipulated that decree be modified to limit use of depositions in question in suits relating to same subject matter as instant case.—Caterpillar Tractor Co. v. 94. Amendment to accord with parties' views

Circuit court of appeals is not at liberty to amend judgment to accord with respective views of parties to suit on construction contract involving questions of fact.—St. Joseph Loan & Trust Co. v. Studebaker Corporation, C.C.A.Ind., 66 F.2d 151, certiorari denied 54 S.Ct. 209, 290 U.S. 699, 78 L.Ed. 601.

Issue not tried

Where United States sought recovery of excessive payments made by Alien Property Custodian on ground that they had been induced by fraudulent misrepresentations and also that they resulted from a mistake of law, and verdict had been directed on theory of mistake of law, circuit court of appeals, on affirming judgment, would not direct district court to disallow interest allowed, since amount of interest depended on whether there had been fraud and that issue had not been tried.—U. S. v. Rodiek, C.C.A.N.Y., 120 F.2d 760, denying rehearing 117 F.2d 588, certiorari granted Rodiek v. U. S., 62 S.Ct. 101, 314 U.S. 597, 86 L.Ed. 481, affirmed 62 S.Ct. 793, 315 U.S. 783, 86 L.Ed. 1190, rehearing denied 62 S.Ct. 940, 316 U.S. 707, 86 L.Ed. 1774.

Discretion of court

If amount of interest recoverable by United States in action to recover excessive payments made by Alien Property Custodian was a matter of discretion based on considerations of fairness, the circuit court of appeals, on affirming judgment, could not di-to a modification of the order where such modification is in his favor.[95]

Correction of formal or clerical errors. Mere clerical errors in the form of a judgment, as shown in the C.J.S. title Judgments § 237, also 34 C.J. p 229 note 83, may, and should, be corrected in the court below. If, however, there has been a failure of the lower court in this respect, such errors will usually be remedied in the appellate court by that court either directly modifying the judgment or decree or remanding the case to the lower court with directions to make the modification.[96]

Changing relief or recovery or denial thereof. In a proper case an appellate court may modify the judgment of the lower court by altering the relief granted, as by striking out and eliminating improper provisions in the judgment or decree,[97] striking out part of the relief and substituting other relief,[98] changing an absolute dismissal to a dismissal without prejudice[99] or a dismissal at the cost of defendant,[1] amending a judgment for defendant on the pleadings to be without prejudice to another action,[2] or substituting other parties for those for, or against whom, the judgment was rendered.[3]

Although it has been denied that the circuit court of appeals has power to increase the award made by the verdict of a jury,[4] at least where it does not appear from the record that defendant's liability for the amount was conceded or that there was no room for contesting it,[5] generally the court has power, in a proper case, to modify, or to order the lower court to modify, the judgment appealed from by reducing the amount thereof,[6] as where there were errors of computation.[7] With respect to interest, judgments have been modified and reduced in amount where they have erroneously allowed and included interest,[8] or allowed interest at too high a rate,[9] or for too long a period of time.[10]

The general rules hereinbefore discussed have been applied by the appellate courts in modifying or refusing to modify judgment or decrees in actions or proceedings for an injunction.[11]

Effect of modification. Modification of a decree in some particulars without modifying other provisions leaves it effective and conclusive of the rights of the parties as to such other provisions.[12]

aa. In General

Any material and harmful error of law entering into, or forming the basis of, some legal action, ruling, or decision of the lower court affords ground for reversal; and a judgment may be reversed on confession of error, or for want of jurisdiction.

While an appellate court will usually reverse only for a clear and material error of law,[13] as a general rule practically any material and harmful error of law entering into, or forming the basis of, some legal action, ruling, or decision of the lower court will afford grounds for reversal.[14] Thus a judgment will be reversed for material error of the trial court in its rulings on the sufficiency of the pleadings,[15] as where the court erroneously sustained a demurrer,[16] or where the pleadings are insufficient to support the judgment rendered;[17] in declining, on the ground of lack of power, to allow an amendment to be made which it was within its discretion to grant;[18] in applying the rules of evidence;[19] in giving improper, or in refusing to give proper, instructions to the jury;[20] or in dismissing the action[21] or directing a verdict,[22] as where the evidence did not warrant a directed verdict, notwithstanding both parties moved for a directed verdict.[23] It is ground for reversal that the district court granting a temporary injunction did not state reasons therefor and did not make findings of fact and conclusions of law as required by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure,[24] yet where the judgment is supported by the findings of fact and is apparently correct, it will not be reversed for error in one particular conclusion of law.[25] A judgment may be reversed where the jury's verdict was general and it was impossible to tell whether the jury found for the prevailing party on an issue unsupported by the evidence which, with others, was erroneously submitted to the jury,[26] or when it was made to appear that there was a want of substantial evidence to support the judgment.[27] The circuit court of appeals cannot set aside a decree on newly discovered evidence, but may grant permission to the district court to hear and determine such application for a rehearing, exercising a sound discretion, by reservation of such right to the district court in its mandate.[28] A trial court should not be reversed for declining to amend a decree which the circuit court of appeals has affirmed.[29] Where an action at law is tried without a jury and the court makes a general or special finding of fact, the appellate court cannot reverse that finding, or the judgment based thereon, for any error in fact.[30]

Confession of error. A judgment will ordinarily be reversed on a confession of error by appellee, respondent, or defendant in error.[31]

Want of jurisdiction. A judgment or order rendered without jurisdiction or authority must ordinarily be reversed,[32] and an appellate court may of its own motion reverse such a judgment or order.[33] This rule applies where the record does not affirmatively show jurisdiction;[34] and it has been applied to lack of jurisdiction of the subject matter.[35]

bb. Technical, Formal, or Trivial Defects or Errors

The circuit court of appeals will not reverse a judgment on account of immaterial, technical, formal, or trivial defects or errors.

Immaterial, technical, formal, or trivial defects or errors do not afford grounds for reversal under the statute requiring the appellate court to give judgment after examination of the entire record without regard to technical errors, defects, or exceptions which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties.[36] So, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 61, providing that no error is ground for disturbing a judgment or order unless inconsistent with substantial justice, while intended for the guidance of the district court, should be heeded by the appellate court to make it effective.[37] However, neither this rule nor the statute was intended to deprive a litigant of a substantial right,[38] and where error is shown, and it does not clearly appear that the correct result was reached and that the error was not injurious, the court will reverse the judgment.[39] The statute, which embodies a sound principle of practice,[40] governs the disposition of cases on appeal, whether civil or criminal, legal or equitable, and applies to all actions at law, including those wherein a jury is waived.[41] It does not authorize setting aside a former judgment which has become final by the lapse of the term.[42]

Applying the general rule, it has been held that the circuit court of appeals will not reverse for immaterial, technical, formal, or trivial irregularities of procedure;[43] errors or defects in process;[44] defects or errors with respect to the pleadings;[45] errors in the joinder of two or more causes of action;[46] errors or irregularities in connection with the trial of the case,[47] such as improper argument

Treating motion to dismiss complaint as answer
Where district court treated motion to dismiss complaint in the nature of an answer and decided case on merits, and neither party would benefit by reversal which would require district court to decide questions which it had apparently decided, circuit court of appeals would consider case on merits.—A. of counsel,[48] or the giving of supplementary instructions to the jury in the absence of counsel for the parties;[49] errors with respect to the dismissal of a case;[50] errors in the giving,[51] failure to give,[52] or refusal,[53] of instructions; errors with respect to conclusions of law[54] or failure to make findings in accordance with the procedural rule;[55] or errors in the judgment, order, or decree,[56] or with respect to costs.[57] An insufficient bill of exceptions on appeal is not a mere technical error which may be disregarded under the statute.[58]

Reception of evidence. The circuit court of appeals will not reverse for erroneous rulings on the reception of evidence which do not affect the result or are not materially injurious to the rights of the complaining party.[59] In accordance with this, it has been held that judgment will not be reversed because of error in admission[60] or exclusion[61] of evidence; but the statute does not preclude a reversal for errors in the admission of evidence which was given undue emphasis before the jury.[62] Whether or not a substantial right was invaded by the admission of irrelevant and incompetent evidence must depend on the circumstances of each case.[63]

cc. Amount or Extent of Recovery

A judgment will not be reversed because of a technical error in permitting recovery on a wrong theory, or because of a trifling error in the amount awarded, but it will not be affirmed on the ground that plaintiff could recover no more than nominal damages where the trial was terminated before proof of damages was made; and where the decree was erroneous in respect of costs, it may also be reversed with respect thereto.

The circuit court of appeals will not reverse a judgment because of a technical error in permitting recovery on a wrong theory, where defendant was not injured thereby.[64] Accordingly, a judgment will not be reversed because of the allowance of a claim as special damages rather than as an element of general damages.[65] Where the judgment is clearly excessive and the exact amount of the excess is not ascertainable from the record, the judgment will be reversed.[66] The court will refuse to reverse a judgment on account of a trivial error in the amount awarded as damages where the cost of a retrial would be as much as, or more than, the

50. Want of notice to defendant

Irregularity in dismissing a suit on plaintiff's motion without notice to defendants does not require reversal of a subsequent decree of dismissal made after notice, even though the record does not show a motion to vacate the former orders, where no reason appeared why the suit should not be dismissed.—Hines v. Martin, C.C.A.Miss., 286 F. 653.

amount indicated as error.[67] Likewise a judgment or decree will not ordinarily be reversed for an inconsiderable mistake in the matter of interest,[68] or merely because nominal damages were not awarded plaintiff.[69] A judgment for defendant will not be affirmed, however, on the ground that plaintiff could recover no more than nominal damages where the trial was terminated before proof of damages was made.[70] While a reversal of a judgment or decree will not be granted in a case where the only error relates to the allowance or taxation of costs, where the decree is found to be erroneous in other respects, the circuit court of appeals may reverse or modify the decree of the district court with respect to costs in accordance with its own conclusions as to the equities of the case.[71]

(b) Scope and Extent of Relief in General

The circuit court of appeals may affirm in part and reverse in part where the judgment consists of distinct and independent matters, where plaintiff sets up several counts or causes of action capable of separation, where several distinct judgments are grouped in one entry, or where there are several coparties.

Where a judgment appealed from consists of distinct and independent matters, so that an erroneous portion thereof can be segregated from the parts that are correct, the court will not set aside the entire judgment, but only so much as is erroneous, leaving the residue undisturbed.[72] Where the judgment is entire and indivisible, however, it cannot be reversed in part and affirmed in part, and if there is reversible error therein, it must be set aside in toto.[73] Where plaintiff in his pleading sets up several counts or several causes of action and error is committed as to only part of them, the judgment, if capable of separation, should be affirmed in part and reversed in part.[74] On the other hand, where the issue or count infected by error cannot be segregated, the judgment will be reversed in toto.[75] So where cases separately commenced have been consolidated for trial, or where several distinct judgments in favor of separate plaintiffs are for convenience grouped in one entry, the reviewing court can properly effect a severance, and affirm some and reverse others.[76] A judgment or decree relating to several lots or parcels of land may be reversed as to those concerning which error has been committed, and affirmed as to the remainder.[77] A reversal as to one or more of several coparties may be had whenever the circumstances of the case render such action proper.[78] On affirmance of the decree between the original parties, the court has no power to reverse it as to an intervener who did not join the appeal.[79]

(c) Rendering or Ordering Final Judgment

On reversing a case, the circuit court of appeals may render or direct entry of the proper final judgment where the ends of justice would not be promoted by a new trial, but will not ordinarily do so where the facts have not been fully developed, or where the evidence is conflicting, or where to do so would contravene the provisions of the Seventh Amendment to the federal Constitution.

As a general rule, the circuit court of appeals reversing a judgment in an action at law will not render or order final judgment where the facts have not been fully developed and the case for the unsuccessful party may be strengthened on another trial,[80] or where the evidence is conflicting,[81] or an issue of fact for the trial court is undetermined,[82] or the circumstances are not such as to permit a decision as a matter of law.[83] Thus where the district court in an action at law dismissed the complaint at the close of the evidence on the ground of res judicata, the circuit court of appeals on holding such dismissal erroneous cannot direct final judgment for plaintiff on the ground that the district court should have granted a directed verdict for plaintiff.[84] In a proper case, however, final judgment may be rendered or directed,[85] as where the facts of the case are undisputed by reason of the evidence being without material conflict or otherwise,[86] and only a question of law is involved,[87] for example, where the facts are admitted or agreed to by the parties.[88] Thus the circuit court of appeals may render, or direct the lower court to render,[89] the proper judgment in a case tried without a jury where the facts were fully developed,[90] where there were no controverted questions of fact[91] or the facts were agreed on by the parties,[92] or where the findings of the court are undisputed,[93] or where the reversal is for error of law arising on the pleadings or record proper;[94] but it has been held that in such a case where the circuit court of appeals reverses because the finding of fact was not justified by the evidence, it cannot direct the entry of a judgment, but can only order a new trial.[95]

in stated, on an appeal from a judgment in an action at law, tried by a jury, the circuit court of appeals can correct the error complained of only by directing a new trial, and cannot itself render or direct such judgment as should have been rendered below,[96] being precluded from doing so by the Seventh Amendment to the Constitution which requires adherence to the rule of the common law that a verdict cannot be disturbed for an error of law occurring on the trial without awarding a new trial;[97] and this has been held to be the case even where the error consisted of a refusal to grant a nonsuit or to direct a verdict.[98] Nevertheless, the circuit court of appeals, on reversing a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff for error in denying defendant's motions for dismissal of the complaint and a directed verdict on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict for plaintiff after reserving decision on such motions and submitting the case to the jury subject to the court's rulings thereon, can and should direct a judgment of dismissal on the merits rather than a new trial;[99] and under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 50 (b), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, providing that when a motion for a directed verdict is denied at the close of the evidence, the judge is deemed to have submitted the action to the jury subject to a later determination of the legal questions raised by the motion, the appellate court, on reversal, may dismiss the action even though the trial court did not specifically reserve decision,[1] although formerly a new trial could be avoided, and judgment rendered non obstante veredicto only where a motion to direct a verdict was reserved and the verdict taken subject to the reservation.[2] Where a party moves for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial in the alternative, if the trial judge denies judgment notwithstanding the verdict and also denies a new trial, on appeal the circuit court of appeals may reverse the judgment and itself enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict[3] or may reverse and remand for a new trial for errors of law.[4] On the other hand, if, in such case, the trial judge enters judgment notwithstanding the verdict and in the alternative grants a new trial, only the action in entering the judgment would be a ground of appeal, and if the judgment is reversed, the case, on remand, would be governed by the trial judge's award of a new trial;[5] and if the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was granted without a ruling in the alternative, and the judgment is reversed by the circuit court of appeals, the cause must be remanded to the district court to hear and rule on the motion for new trial.[6] Where the court erroneously sustained a motion for a directed verdict, or, in the alternative, for a new trial, and set aside a verdict and judgment, however, the circuit court of appeals was not required to remand the case with directions to pass on the motion for new trial where the only question involved on the appeal was whether the case was one to be submitted to a jury, it being proper for the appellate court to reverse with directions to reinstate the verdict of the jury.[7] Where plaintiff moved for a new trial after an unconditional verdict for defendant, but not for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and the district court denied the motion and entered judgment for defendant, the circuit court of appeals has jurisdiction to reverse and remand for a new trial but is without power, consistently with the Seventh Amendment, to direct the district court to give judgment for plaintiff.[8] Where the verdict of the jury is a special one covering every controverted issue in the case, it is the duty of the circuit court of appeals on reversal to direct the entry of the proper judgment.[9]

In an equity suit it is the duty of the circuit court of appeals to enter, or direct the lower court to enter, the decree which should have been entered,[10]

When rule inapplicable

An appellate court reviewing action of district court on motion under federal rule for new trial or for entry of judgment notwithstanding verdict may direct the action to be taken with respect to such motion by district court on remand, but such rule is not applicable where overruling of motion for judgment non obstante veredicto is neither assigned as error nor considered by appellate court.—Madden Furniture v. but final judgment will not be given where it is more equitable or justice requires that the case be remanded for a new trial or other proceedings.[11] On appeal from a decree granting an interlocutory injunction, where the question is raised whether the cause is one of equitable cognizance and the circuit court of appeals is of the opinion that equity has no jurisdiction, it may dissolve the injunction and dismiss the bill.[12] It is also proper to direct the dismissal of the bill, where the court determines that complainant is not entitled to sue,[13] or where requisite jurisdictional findings were not made.[14] On appeal from a decree denying an interlocutory injunction, it was improper for the circuit court of appeals to treat the case as ripe for final disposition by remanding it with directions to enter a decree granting an injunction without specifying its scope.[15]

Want of jurisdiction of lower court. The appellate court will not, on reversing a judgment, remand the cause for further proceedings, but will itself render final judgment, or direct or render a judgment of dismissal or nonsuit, where the court below had no jurisdiction of the subject matter.[16] Where it appears that a necessary defendant was not joined, a decree of dismissal on the merits should not be affirmed, but the circuit court of appeals should reverse with directions to dismiss the bill for want of a necessary party.[17] Similarly, on appeal from a decree of the circuit court sustaining a demurrer to the bill and dismissing the suit on the merits, where the bill contained no averment of the amount or value in controversy, which was essential to give a federal court jurisdiction, the decree was reversed, with directions to enter a dismissal for want of jurisdiction and without prejudice.[18] Where the district court did not pass on the merits of the case, but dismissed it for lack of ju-

Denial of relief
In ordinary equity case, relief would be denied on appeal, if record disclosed no liability.—Hughes v. Reed, C.C.A.Okl., 46 F.2d 435.

Suspension of suit
Beneficiaries of life policy would be entitled to have insurer's equity suit for cancellation of policy remanded to district court with instruction for proper order of suspension until determination of beneficiaries' action at law in state court on policy if any prejudice could be shown if this were not done, notwithstanding beneficiaries' failure to appeal from that portion of decree sustaining jurisdiction of district court as court of equity.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Cunningham, C.C.A.Iowa, 87 F.2d 842.

Temporary injunction
Where interlocutory injunction against enforcement of Agricultural Adjustment Act was improvidently issued because no finding that prosecutions were threatened was made, and government's attorneys stated that no prosecutions would be instituted, circuit court of appeals in vacating injunction and remanding cause would not continue temporary injunction pending further hearing by district court.—Sparks v. Mellwood Dairy, C.C.A.Ky., 74 F.2d 695.

Time governing
On a writ of error, an appellate court would direct the entry of the order which should have been made by the trial court on the day when it entered the judgment under review, but on appeal in equity there was no such rigid rule.—Lindley v. Denver, Ohio, 259 F. 83, 170 C.C.A. 151.

Absence of proof of critical facts
Appellate court will not pass final decree on appeal for defendants in equity suit, in absence of proof of critical facts, susceptible of ready determination from records of plaintiff, its agent or both or inquiry from officers of either, but will vacate decree appealed from and remand cause for findings on supplemental proofs as to such facts.—Kansas Educational Ass'n of M. risdiction, and there was no assignment of error relating to the merits, the circuit court of appeals cannot pass on the merits, and in reversing the dismissal on the jurisdictional point can only remand the cause for further proceedings.[19]

Insufficient cause of action or sufficient defense. Where the complaint sets forth no cause of action and no amendment to correct its deficiency can properly be granted, the circuit court of appeals may direct that judgment be entered for defendant.[20] In a case tried without a jury, where there was a full finding of facts and the facts as found affirmatively establish a complete defense, the circuit court of appeals will, on reversing a judgment for plaintiff, direct the entry of that judgment which should have been entered.[21] Frequently in equitable actions, but also sometimes in actions at law, an appellate court, on reversing a judgment or decree for plaintiff and deciding that plaintiff has not the capacity to maintain the suit or cannot recover in any event in that particular suit, will dismiss the bill or complaint or nonsuit plaintiff,[22] or direct the lower court to dismiss the bill or complaint.[23] Dismissal of the bill has been directed on reversal of an order or decree granting a temporary injunction.[24]

Controversy becoming moot. Where the controversy has become moot, the cause on reversal will be dismissed.[25]

Sufficient cause of action and insufficient defense. Where the facts are practically undisputed, the amount of recovery certain, plaintiff has made out a prima facie case, and defendant, although having full opportunity to do so, has established no defense sufficient to prevent or bar the right of recovery, the appellate court, on reversing a judgment in defendant's favor, will sometimes render the proper judgment for plaintiff, or direct the court below to do so.[26] The court in reversing a final judgment sustaining a demurrer to the petition is not authorized to direct judgment for plaintiff in the nature of a judgment non obstante,[27] especially where plaintiff omitted an essential averment, even though the absence thereof was waived by not demurring on such ground.[28]

Conformity of judgment to verdict. Provided the case is not one requiring further proceedings,[29] where a wrong judgment is rendered on a proper verdict or findings of fact, the appellate court may reverse and render, or direct, the judgment which should have been given below.[30] The rule applies

Reinstatement of original judgment

Where federal district court followed procedure substantially the

and the appellate court will, on reversal, order judgment on the verdict where the trial court erroneously dismissed the complaint[31] or rendered judgment contrary to the verdict on a point of law reserved.[32]

Trial before master. Where the circuit court of appeals determines that the district court erred in disapproving findings and conclusions of a master to whom the case had been referred, the appellate court, to avoid unnecessary prolongation of the litigation, may direct that the master's report allowing damages be approved in an amount determined by the circuit court of appeals to be reasonable.[33]

After several trials. Where a motion to set aside a verdict in favor of one party and to allow a new trial is granted through abuse of discretion, and on the second trial a verdict is returned and judgment rendered for the opposite party, on appeal the second judgment will be reversed and the cause remanded with direction to enter judgment on the first verdict.[34]

(d) Ordering New Trial or Other Proceeding in Lower Court

The circuit court of appeals has power, under proper circumstances, to order a cause remanded for a new trial or other appropriate proceedings, and will exercise its discretion by ordering such proceedings whenever it appears that the ends of justice will best be served thereby.

Although final judgment may often be rendered in accordance with the rules stated supra § 301 a (7) (c), the circuit court of appeals is usually held to have the power, under proper circumstances, to order the case remanded to the lower court for a new trial or other appropriate proceedings.[35] This power is largely, although not entirely, discretionary,[36] but the court, on reversal, will usually exercise its discretion by ordering a new trial or further proceedings whenever it appears that the ends of justice will best be served by such course,[37] and will refuse to make such an order where it appears that it is unnecessary and would serve no useful purpose.[38] The circuit court of appeals should not leave in effective operation the final decree of the district court and at the same time revest that court with jurisdiction to retry the cause.[39] While the awarding of a new trial on reversal was much more common in actions at law than in actions in equity,[40] an equity court had pow-same as if it had received original verdict for plaintiff conditionally on points of law reserved and entered judgment for defendant, circuit court of appeals had power to order the district court to reinstate the original verdict and judgment for plaintiff.—Maty v. er to remand for a new trial or other proceedings on reversal in an action in equity,[41] as where a motion to dismiss on the merits at the close of plaintiff's case was granted.[42]

Nature and extent of proceedings ordered. The circuit court of appeals, on remanding a cause, may in its discretion, either grant a complete new trial or restrict or limit the purpose of the proceedings or the issues to be tried in the lower court,[43] according to which course is demanded by the circumstances or the ends of justice.[44] Indeed, the directions, instructions, and limitations, imposed or given may be such that the subsequent proceedings in the lower court, whether or not denominated a new trial, fall short of being a full and unrestricted new trial of the original issues.[45] Where the error in the trial relates only to a certain issue which is in no way dependent for its proper trial on certain other issues already satisfactorily tried and a partial new trial will not work injustice to any of the parties concerned, the cause may be remanded, on reversal, for the trial of the issue erroneously tried, and for that alone.[46] Thus it has been held that a cause may be remanded for a trial of questions not passed on or submitted below;[47] and, if the only exceptions sustained relate to the question of damages or amount of recovery, the new trial may be ordered on the question alone.[48] To justify the court in limiting the issues on a new trial to the question of damages, however, it should 43. U.S.—McCarthy v. Wynne, C.C.A.Okl., 126 F.2d 620.

Ruling on motion and exception

Jury-waived case in which defendant's motion for judgment was denied after case was taken under advisement without resuming trial would be reversed to enable ruling on motion to be made and exception to be taken in progress of trial which could be incorporated in bill of exceptions, where defendant had done all it could to save its rights and record showed that court after trial allowed exception.—U. S. v. Martin, C.C.A.Kan., 80 F.2d 460.

Error requiring complete new trial

Where evidence erroneously rejected was offered by vessel owner not merely to show extent of seaman's injuries, but to show nonexistence of any injury, judgment in favor of seaman would be reversed in its entirety and would not be upheld as to recovery on count for maintenance and cure while permitting retrial only on issue of damages.—Ulm v. Moore-McCormack Lines, C.C.A.N.Y., 117 F.2d 222, denying rehearing 115 F.2d 492, certiorari denied 61 S.Ct. 941, 313 U.S. 567, 85 L.Ed. 1525.

Constitutional questions

On retrial of action to enjoin the drilling of an oil well under an order of the Texas railroad commission on ground that order violated local law and due process clause of Fourteenth Amendment, district court should first determine whether order was in conformity with laws and constitution of Texas, and, if not, any determination under the federal Constitution is rendered unnecessary, but if order is held valid under local law, the court is then bound to pass on any federal constitutional question presented.—Sun Oil Co. v. Burford, C.C.A.Tex., 130 F.2d 10, vacating 124 F.2d 467.

clearly appear that all questions in respect to liability have been considered and passed on.[49] Where the amount of damages recovered was not plainly insufficient, and plaintiff apparently seeks to retain his present recovery, and, without jeopardizing that, to try to increase it, the circuit court of appeals will not remand the case with an order to assess additional damages.[50] The circuit court of appeals in setting aside an equity decree and remanding the cause on the assumption that the cause would be transferred to the law side of the court could not deprive the parties of their statutory right to waive a jury nor relieve the district judge of his primary responsibility to pass on the substantial character of plaintiff's evidence,[51] nor should the appellate court deprive itself, in the event of a second appeal, of the judgment of the district court on such evidence.[52] In an action tried by a district judge without a jury, where an order granting defendant's motion for dismissal was reversed, the district judge who heard plaintiff's evidence on the original trial may be directed to proceed with the case as though defendant's motion for dismissal had not been granted by him, without requiring plaintiff to offer his evidence a second time.[53]

It is quite generally held that on reversal and remand for new trial or other appropriate proceedings, an appellate court may and will, in furtherance of justice, direct that the parties, or either of them, amend or be given leave to amend their pleadings, where the pleadings are defective but not fatally so.[54] Accordingly, on reversal of cause and remand to trial court, it is sometimes ordered that plaintiff[55] or defendant[56] be given an opportunity to change, amend, or supplement his pleadings. Particularly is the appellate court inclined to do this on the reversal of an order sustaining a demurrer to the pleadings.[57] So on reversal of the judgment or decree for want of jurisdiction, the court below may be directed or authorized to allow an amendment,[58] or will be left to exercise its discretion in the matter,[59] unless the record shows that an amendment would not accord with the facts.[60] Although the answer admitted diversity of citizenship and existence of the requisite jurisdictional amount, the circuit court of appeals may permit the pleadings to be amended in the court below so as to present a jurisdictional issue.[61] Where judgment was reversed for want of jurisdiction in a case arising under the laws of the United States, the circuit court of appeals cannot allow an amendment to show jurisdiction based on diversity of citizenship,[62] nor can that court direct or instruct the

Changed conditions

Where an appeal from an order denying a temporary injunction has become moot by changed conditions, but the main case is pending on a motion to dismiss the complaint, the order will not be permitted to stand, but will be reversed, with direction to permit plaintiffs to amend their complaint if they so desire.—Dakota Coal Co. v. court below with respect to the exercise of its discretion in granting or denying leave to make such an amendment;[63] and a statute permitting an appellate court to allow an amendment when diversity of citizenship has been defectively alleged is not applicable in such case.[64]

A cause may be remanded in order that a defect of parties may be cured by amendment,[65] but the circuit court of appeals views with disfavor a motion to remand for additional parties interposed after adverse decision on appeal,[66] and will deny the motion where the parties are not indispensable.[67]

A cause may be remanded to the district court with directions to exercise its discretion with regard to retention of jurisdiction, and if it should determine to retain jurisdiction, to decide the cause on the merits.[68] Where jurisdictional facts do not appear in the appellate record, the court may direct them to be made to appear properly to the court below, in default of which the case, after remand, should be dismissed for that reason.[69]

Errors and defects in trial or proceedings. On reversal of a judgment, order, or decree for errors, defects, or irregularities committed or occurring during the course of the trial or proceedings in the court below, and which can be satisfactorily corrected in no other way, an appellate court will usually order a new trial or other appropriate proceedings.[70] Under this rule new trials or other proceedings have been ordered because of the trial of the case on the wrong theory;[71] because the case was tried without a jury under the mistaken impression that it could not be tried any other way;[72] because it plainly appears that the case was not heard on the merits below;[73] because of errors in the instructions to the jury;[74] and for numerous other errors, defects, or mistakes by counsel or the trial court or both, which have prevented such a full and proper trial or proceeding as the law contemplates in order to do justice to all parties concerned.[75] On the other hand, a new trial will not be ordered on account of errors, defects, or irregularities which can be satisfactorily corrected without such proceedings.[76] An appellate court reversing a cause because of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the judgment may or should grant a new trial.[77]

On reversal of a judgment or decree, an appellate court will usually remand for a new trial or for other appropriate proceedings, where one or more material issues or matters in the case were not fully litigated or passed on and determined at the trial either by the court or by the jury.[78] However, this rule does not allow the parties to delay raising issues until the case is heard on appeal and then to have the case remanded for the determination of such issues.[79]

In many cases the court has, on reversal, remanded the cause for a new trial or other proceedings, where the findings of fact were so imperfect that an appellate court could not base a judgment thereon.[80]

On reversal of an order erroneously denying a new trial, the case will be remanded with directions that the court pass on or decide the motion, where it has not fully and properly considered it on its merits.[81]

Imperfect record. If the record is so imperfect or confused that the appellate court cannot render judgment with safety to the rights of the parties, a new trial or other proceedings will often be ordered.[82]

(e) Compelling or Directing Restitution

Where several parties claim an interest in impounded tax funds, on determination of an appeal involving the validity of the tax statute in favor of the taxpayer, determination of the right to the impounded funds will be left to the district court.

Where the amount of a tax alleged due was impounded pending an appeal involving the validity of the taxing statute, on determination of the appeal in the taxpayer's favor, the circuit court of appeals will not direct payment of the impounded funds, but will leave the matter to the determination of the district court, where interventions had been filed by parties claiming an interest in the impounded funds.[83]

(f) Effect of Reversal

An unqualified reversal leaves the case standing as if the reversed judgment or order had never been rendered; and where the appellate court directs final judgment, the action is finally terminated. Dependent orders, judgments, or proceedings fall with the reversed judgment, but distinct and independent judgments or proceedings do not.

The effect of a general and unqualified reversal of a judgment, order, or decree is to nullify it completely and to leave the case standing as if such judgment, order, or decree had never been rendered.[84] Where, on reversal, the appellate court renders or directs final judgment, the action is final-

Cause remanded without specific directions standing in the lower court as if no judgment or decree had been rendered see infra § 301 a (9) (c) aa.

Rates assailed as confiscatory

Where district court, in dismissing bill assailing water rates as confiscatory, determined that a prior valuation of water company's property remained applicable, although thirty-two months had intervened and commodity values had risen, such determination was erroneous and required a reversal by circuit court of appeals to permit district court to hear anew all questions pertinent to issue of confiscation, but such reversal did not necessarily require a finding of confiscation.—McCart v. Indianapolis Water Co., Ind., 58 S.Ct. 324, 302 U.S. 419, 82 L.Ed. 336, modifying, C.C.A., Indianapolis Water Co. v. McCart, 89 F.2d 522, reversing, D.C., 13 F.Supp. 110, and certiorari granted McCart v. Indianapolis Water Co., 58 S.Ct. 14, 302 U.S. 665, 82 L.Ed. 513.

Entire decree reversed

(1) Where decree awarding plaintiff property interest and allowing defendant lien thereon for purchase price was reversed on defendant's appeal, that part of decree awarding defendant lien was necessarily reversed, although plaintiff failed to take cross appeal.—Turner v. Kirkwood, C.C.A.Okl., 62 F.2d 256, certiorari denied 53 S.Ct. 522, 289 U. S. 724, 77 L.Ed. 1474.

(2) Where an interlocutory injunction restrained defendant from infringing plaintiff's patents and also from engaging in unfair competition, a decree of the circuit court of appeals, reversing the order of the district court granting the interlocutory injunction, vacated the injunction in so far as it restrained defendant from unfair competition, as well as that portion enjoining the infringement of plaintiff's patents, although the question of the propriety of restraining unfair competition was not raised nor considered nor decided by the court.—I. T. S. Rubber Co. v. Tee Pee Rubber Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 295 F. 479.

ly terminated;[85] and generally, when the court, finding under the law that no recovery can be had, uses the word "reversed" without more, the term means that the case is at an end.[86] If on plaintiff's appeal a judgment on demurrer is reversed, the case stands as though the demurrer had been overruled.[87]

Where the rights of parties who did not join, or were not made parties to, the appeal were so interwoven and dependent as to be inseparable from the rights of those who were parties to the appeal, a reversal as to one operates as a reversal as to all.[88]

Dependent or independent judgments or proceedings. On the reversal of a judgment, order, or decree, a dependent order, judgment, or proceeding, ancillary and accessory thereto, shares its fate and falls with it.[89] This rule, however, will not operate, by implication, to set aside a distinct and independent judgment or proceeding, although it forms a part of the same litigation.[90]

(8) Amendment, Modification, and Setting Aside of Its Judgment by Circuit Court of Appeals

The circuit court of appeals has inherent power to amend or set aside its judgment while it still has jurisdiction over it.

Ordinarily the circuit court of appeals has inherent power to amend or vacate its judgment while it still has jurisdiction over it.[91] Thus the court has authority to modify its decree on petition filed during the same term at which the decree was entered,[92] and it may do so without granting a rehearing,[93] even though the change was prompted by an application for a rehearing accompanied by a supplemental transcript containing a petition for an injunction not included in the original transcript.[94] An order of reversal entered after the death of appellee which occurred after argument on appeal may be vacated and entered nunc pro tunc as of the date of argument on appeal.[95] An appellate court, after determining a cause on appeal and affirming the judgment will not direct it to be reopened by the lower court to admit new evidence unless such evidence is of a character clearly to show that the decision was erroneous;[96] and the mandate will not be modified so as to remand for further proofs where it is not shown that the real facts were not correctly assumed in the opinion.[97] A modification of the ruling of the circuit court of appeals may be sought only by a petition for a rehearing or for a writ of certiorari to the supreme court seasonably made.[98]

(a) Mandate or Other Order of Remand

The mandate is the order issued by the circuit court of appeals on the decision of an appealed cause directing the action to be taken by the lower court, and should conform to what the court decided, although no particular form is necessary. The opinion of the court constitutes part of the mandate.

The words "mandate" and "procedendo" as used in this title and section denote the order issued by the circuit court of appeals on the decision of a cause on appeal directing the action to be taken or the disposition to be made of the cause by the lower court,[99] and a rule of court requiring the clerk of the circuit court of appeal, after final determination, to issue a mandate or other proper process in the nature of a procedendo to the court below merely requires that the case be handed back to the trial court, so that that court may have jurisdiction, which it lost on appeal, to record and carry out the judgment of the appellate court.[1] The mandate should conform and be restricted to what the court decided as between the parties before it.[2] No particular form is necessary, and the mandate is to be drawn to suit the requirements of the particular case.[3] It is not necessary to recite therein every step in the various stages of the cause.[4] The opinion of the court constitutes a part of its mandate,[5] particularly where the mandate contains a direction to proceed in accordance with the opinion,[6] and counsel are charged with knowledge of that fact, so that if the opinion makes any misstatement or does not sufficiently cover the issues tried it is incumbent on counsel to bring such matters to the attention of the court by proper motion to correct it.[7] By virtue of some court rules the bill of costs is annexed to the mandate to be collected by execution, if necessary, in the lower court.[8] The mandate may be withheld for a stated time to permit the losing party to petition the supreme court for certiorari, and until final determination if certiorari should be granted;[9] and where there has been an extraordinary delay affecting the rights of a party the mandate may go down in less time than that provided by court rule.[10] After affirmance of a decree dismissing a bill in equity because of the existence of an adequate remedy at law, the order of remand may permit the transfer of the cause to the law docket and the recasting of the pleadings and may be so amended.[11]

bb. Law of the Case

The decision of the circuit court of appeals becomes the law of the case as to all matters properly within the scope thereof, and controls in all subsequent trials or proceedings; but the doctrine applies only where the facts are the same on the retrial, and not where they are essentially different.

The decision of the circuit court of appeals is the law of the case in further proceedings in the cause in the trial court[18] and in all subsequent stag-

Rule of practice

(1) The doctrine of the law of the case is a rule of practice or procedure.—Western Fire Ins. Co. v. University City, C.C.A.Mo., 124 F.2d 698—City of Sedalia ex rel. and to Use of Ferguson v. Shell Petroleum Corporation, C.C.A.Mo., 81 F.2d 193.

(2) It is not an absolute rule of law.—City of Sedalia ex rel. and to Use of Ferguson v. Shell Petroleum Corporation, supra.

(3) Nor is it a limitation of power, although it will not be departed from except for very cogent reasons.—Western Fire Ins. Co. v. University City, supra—Connett v. City of Jerseyville, C.C.A.Ill., 110 F.2d 1015.

Failure to enter decree conforming to mandate

Decision of the circuit court of appeals, and its decree and mandate, reversing a decree of the district court, constituted the law of the case, notwithstanding the district court's failure to enter a decree in conformity with the mandate.—Deppe v. General Motors Corporation, C.C.A.N.J., 98 F.2d 813, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 462, 306 U.S. 633, 83 L.Ed. 1035, rehearing denied 59 S.Ct. 581, 306 U.S. 668, 83 L.Ed. 1063, petition denied 59 S.Ct. 821, 307 U.S. 611, 83 L.Ed. 1494.

Distinguishing feature of new trial

The sole difference between the effect of a new trial granted by the trial court after setting aside a verdict, and a new trial ordered by the circuit court of appeals on reversal of judgment, is that the legal propositions which the circuit court of appeals settles and determines on appeal cannot ordinarily be again questioned.—Millers' Mut. cord therewith.[24]

While the rule that the decision of the circuit court of appeals is the law of the case in subsequent proceedings in the same cause does not extend to matters not decided,[25] even though the appellate court may have made some statements or remarks with respect thereto,[26] it does apply to and comprehend all points presented and decided[27] and necessarily involved,[28] regardless of whether or not such points are specially noted in the mandate.[29] Furthermore, the decision of the appellate court is the law of the case as to all questions that might have been raised;[30] and, although a matter is not essential to the decision of the case on appeal, if it is important for the purposes of a new trial, and in that view passed on, it becomes the law of the case.[31] A decision of the circuit court of appeals on the legal merits of the case, which was reversed on a question of practice only by the supreme court, is, on the second trial, the law of the case on the merits.[32]

Particular applications of the doctrine. The doctrine of the law of the case has been applied to decisions of the circuit court of appeals with respect to matters of jurisdiction,[33] limitations of actions,[34] evidence,[35] findings,[36] costs,[37] and damages;[38] also

Overlooked matters

Failure to stress contention on first appeal sufficiently to attract attention of reviewing court and demand specific treatment did not preclude contention from being controlled by "law of case" on second trial, although it was then more vehemently urged, since, if opinion on first appeal overlooked potency of contention, matter should have been called to reviewing court's attention by motion for rehearing.—Claiborne-Reno Co. v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., C.C.A.Iowa, 77 F.2d 565.

Proceedings contemplated at time of appeal

Where, on former appeal, the denial of an injunction to restrain further proceedings in the state court for dissolution of a corporation was affirmed, the court below properly refused thereafter to enjoin further proceedings in the state court, which had been contemplated at the time of the former appeal, although the particular steps sought to be restrained were not then before the court.—Window Glass Mach. Weight and sufficiency to decisions with respect to construction of contracts,[39] negligence,[40] and matters relating to receivers.[41]

Where the facts shown on the second trial are substantially the same as on the first trial, the decision of the appellate court as to weight and sufficiency of the evidence is binding on the lower court.—Kershaw Oil Mill v. National Bank of Savannah, S.C., 209 F. 835, 126 C.C.A. 559.

Same or different facts on trial. The rule that the decision of a circuit court of appeals is the law of the case on a retrial or further proceedings in the cause is applicable and controlling when, and only when, the facts appearing on the second trial are substantially the same as those shown on the first trial; in other words, the facts on the second trial must be such as to make applicable the points of law decided on appeal before such points of law can be considered the law of the case.[42] Where the circuit court of appeals has decided that the facts proved raise a question for the jury, it is error for the lower court on a second trial in which the same, or practically the same, facts are developed to enter a judgment notwithstanding the verdict.[43] On the other hand, its decision of a question involving, turning on, or dependent on a matter of fact is not the law of the case on a subsequent trial of the same cause where materially different facts have been pleaded[44] or are shown in evidence.[45]

State law. Where a circuit court of appeals in a given case has ascertained and applied what it apprehends to be the pertinent state law, such ascertainment of the local law is binding on the trial court at the retrial of the case unless it is clearly made to appear by subsequent statute, no more than declaratory, or by binding state court decision that the law of the state was other than what the federal appellate court had understood it to be.[46]

aa. Jurisdiction of Lower Court after Remand

On remand the lower court has jurisdiction to take any action that is not inconsistent with the decision and mandate of the circuit court of appeals.

Generally, on the remand of a cause, the trial court may make any order or direction in its further progress that is not inconsistent with the decision and directions of the circuit court of appeals,[47] and may consider and decide any matters

Identity of pleading not controlling
Substantial identity of facts on first and second trials, not identity of pleading, is test of whether law determined on first appeal is "law of case" as to second trial.—Claiborne-Reno Co. v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., C.C.A.Iowa, 77 F.2d 565.

Facts tending to strengthen inferences
Additional facts at a trial, after reversal because no negligence was shown, which only tend to strengthen the inferences from the facts presented at the first trial, do not relieve the trial court from following the decision of the circuit court of appeals.—Connelley v. Enjoining exhibits
Where mandate ordered reinstatement of bill, trial court, having jurisdiction thereof could properly determine in first instance whether exhibits, inadvertently overlooked by appellate court, should be enjoined.—American Safety Razor Corporation v. International Safety Razor Corporation, C.C.A.N.J., 61 F.2d 479.

Summary judgment
Where district court's judgment in favor of plaintiff was reversed by circuit court of appeals on the ground of error in refusing to find that claim sued on by plaintiff had been fully adjudicated against it in prior state court litigation, and case remanded and where no new legal situation or issue of fact was shown to exist on remand, district court properly entered summary judgment for defendant.—A. B. C. Fireproof Warehouse Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 122 F.2d 657.

left open by the mandate of the appellate court,[48] but the power of the trial court cannot under any circumstances rise above the mandate.[49] Where a cause is reversed and remanded to the district court with directions for further proceedings in conformity with the opinion of the circuit court of appeals, the only command which is carried to the district court is to apply the principle of law established by the appellate court, in its final disposition.[50] A cause remanded without specific directions stands in the lower court as though no judgment or decree had been rendered.[51] Where, however, the appellate court by its decision and directions puts an end to the litigation, the lower court is without jurisdiction except to comply with whatever directions are made.[52] On reversal and remand by the circuit court of appeals, the record in the previous trial is properly before the district court in considering the right of a party to a summary judgment.[53]

bb. Compliance with Mandate or Directions

On remand of the cause it is the duty of the lower court to comply substantially with the mandate of the circuit court of appeals and to obey the directions therein.

It is the duty of the lower court, on the remand of the cause, to comply with the mandate of the circuit court of appeals and to obey the directions therein[54] without variation,[55] even though the mandate may be or is supposed to be erroneous.[56] Accordingly, if the trial court fails to follow the directions of the appellate court the judgment should be reversed if the errors are prejudicial to appellant.[57] The rule as to obedience to the mandate, however, requires only an intelligent and reasonable compliance therewith,[58] and it has been held that a substantial, rather than a literal, compliance is sufficient.[59] In order fully to effectuate the mandate, action taken inconsistent therewith pending the appeal may and should be corrected, even though no specific directions to that effect are given.[60]

cc. Modification or Avoidance of Judgment or Order

Generally the lower court has no power, after a cause has been determined by the circuit court of appeals, to vacate or modify the judgment of the appellate court, or its own judgment after affirmance.

Generally, after a cause has been determined by the circuit court of appeals and remanded, the lower court is without power to open[61] or vacate or modify[62] the judgment of the appellate court, or to alter, extend, or relieve from the precise fulfillment of a specified condition on which the effect of the appellate judgment is made to depend.[63] Likewise, after affirmance on appeal, except as directed by the appellate court,[64] the lower court is generally without power to vacate, alter, or modify the judgment originally entered by it;[65] and the trial court properly declines to modify a part of a decree which the circuit court of appeals refused to modify on appeal.[66] Nevertheless, where after mandate of the circuit court of appeals affirming a decree in favor of plaintiff, an opinion of the supreme court in another case announced a decision at variance with the opinion of the circuit court of appeals, it is proper for the district court to vacate its decree and dismiss the suit notwithstanding the mandate.[67]

The trial court generally does not have the power to open a judgment or decree entered by it in strict conformity with the mandate of the appellate court,[68] although it may amend a judgment entered by it but which falls short of a compliance with the mandate,[69] and may correct clerical errors in the judgment rendered by it in pursuance

Power reserved in decree

(1) Where railroad mortgage foreclosure decree which was affirmed as modified by circuit court of appeals expressly extended term at which decree was entered until after complete execution of provisions of decree, party seeking modification of decree was not required to apply to circuit court of appeals for leave to make application where provision of decree extending term of trial court was not matter of controversy in reviewing court, and was in no way modified by reviewing court, since such provision stood in no different situation after affirmance of decree by reviewing court than before appeal.—Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., C.C.A.Minn., 98 F.2d 345.

Bank of Nova Scotia, C.C.A. Puerto Rico, 116 F.2d 379, certiorari denied 62 S.Ct. 56, 314 U.S. 615, 86 L.Ed. 495.

of the mandate.[70]

On remand after appeal by some of the defendants, taken while the court still had jurisdiction, the trial court can vacate or revise its decree as to the defendants not appealing.[71]

dd. Granting New Trial or Rehearing

Generally after remand the lower court cannot grant a new trial on matters which were or could have been raised on appeal, although such relief may be granted where the opinion and mandate of the appellate court expressly or impliedly commit this matter to the discretion of the lower court.

Generally, after a review on the merits and a remand to the lower court, the lower court cannot grant a new trial on grounds which could have, and should have, been raised on the appeal,[72] especially where the matters desired to be reheard or retried have already been disposed of on appeal;[73] and, after a decree of a district court has been affirmed or reversed by the circuit court of appeals, the question whether a party should be allowed to file a bill of review in the district court must be passed on by the appellate court.[74] A new trial or rehearing may be granted where the opinion and mandate of the appellate court expressly or impliedly commit this matter to the discretion of the lower court.[75]

(d) Amendments
aa. Pleadings
bb. Parties

aa. Pleadings

Amendment of the pleadings after remand may ordinarily, in the discretion of the trial court, be allowed where expressly authorized by the appellate court or where the latter did not determine the case on the merits or direct final judgment.

Amendment of the pleadings after remand is authorized where leave or direction to that effect has been given by the circuit court of appeals, but the amendment must conform strictly to the terms of the mandate.[76] Cases bearing on the amendment of pleadings after remand, where no leave or direction has been granted by the appellate court, generally turn on the question of the power of the lower court, rather than on an absolute right of the party asking the amendment, it being held that, even where an amendment is authorized, the question whether it shall be allowed in a particular case is committed primarily to the discretion of the lower court.[77] Where an amendment after remand is permissible, and no specific direction as to amendment has been made by the appellate court, the power to allow it is to be exercised under the same rules as govern the allowance of amendments at any other time.[78]

In some cases the power to allow amendments of pleadings, after remand, is made to depend on whether the appellate court determined the case on the merits, amendments not being permissible when it did so determine the case,[79] and being permissible when the case was not so determined.[80]

80. U.S.—Sheehy v. Mandeville, C.C.D.C., 21 F.Cas.No.12,740, 2 Cranch C.C. 15.

Defendant is entitled to serve an answer and have the case tried on the merits where the circuit court of appeals, on the ground that the complaint was sufficient to enable plaintiff to recover, reversed a judgment granting defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint for insufficiency, and remanded the cause for further proceedings.[81]

The lower court is without power to allow a new or amended pleading to be filed after the cause has been remanded with specific directions, as to the judgment or decree to be rendered,[82] but it is proper for the trial court within its discretion to allow amendments to the pleadings where, without any specific directions, the case has been remanded for further proceedings[83] or for new trial,[84] and the fact that, on reversal, the appellate court has directed the lower court generally to proceed in accordance with the opinion does not preclude an amendment of the pleadings.[85] Defendant is entitled to preserve in his answer his demurrer to the petition notwithstanding a ruling of the circuit court of appeals that the petition did state a cause of action.[86]

The lower court cannot, after remand, allow an amendment to the pleadings which states a new and different cause of action[87] or changes the character of the controversy.[88]

After determination on appeal and remand to the lower court, a party will not be allowed so to plead as to open up matters already adjudicated by the appellate court.[89]

bb. Parties

After remand new parties may sometimes be brought in.

The lower court, after the remand of a cause to it, may, in a proper case, allow new parties to be brought in.[90]

(e) Proceedings after Remand

Further proceedings after remand must be in substantial compliance with the specific directions of the appellate court, and in the absence of specific directions the further proceedings must be consistent with the opinion of the appellate court as determined from the nature of the particular case.

Amendment held improper
Where an injunction against infringement of a copyright had been reversed on the ground that plaintiff was not the owner of the copyright, and the cause remanded, with leave to the plaintiff to procure title to the copyright, if it could do so, the mandate did not permit plaintiff, instead of procuring the title to the copyright, to have the owner thereof joined as a coplaintiff under an agreement which amounted substantially to paying him for permission to use his name in the suit.—Goldwyn Pictures Corporation v. Howells Sales Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 287 F. 100, reversing, D.C., 282 F. 458, and certiorari denied 43 S.Ct. 703, 262 U.S. 755, 67 L.Ed. 1217.

requiring the lower court to comply with the mandate or directions of the appellate court, see supra subdivision a (9) (c) bb of this section, if a cause is remanded with specific directions further proceedings in the trial court must be in substantial compliance with such directions.[91] If however, no specific directions are given on the remand, the question as to what further proceedings can be had consistent with the opinion of the appellate court must be determined from the nature of the particular case.[92] In a proper case the district court may permit defendant relying on a particular statute as a defense to abandon such defense and set up a later statute as a defense.[93] On a remand by the appellate court directing the assessment of damages, both parties are entitled to be heard and adduce evidence;[94] and where a judgment of dismissal was reversed with instructions to enter judgment for plaintiff for the reasonable cost of construction work it was error to enter judgment without notice to defendant.[95] On failure of plaintiff to sustain the burden of proof with respect to jurisdiction, and reversal of the cause for error in not dismissing on that ground, such reversal will not prevent plaintiff on a new trial from proving the allegations of his pleadings concerning jurisdiction.[96] Where the circuit court of appeals directed a modification of the judgment on the record already made, the trial court was without jurisdiction to reopen the case for the taking of additional testimony.[97] Reversal of an interlocutory decree appointing a master did not deprive the trial court of power to award compensation for services rendered by such master under order of the trial court pending appeal where there was no indication that the circuit court of appeals intended that the district court should be deprived of such power.[98] Although the decree was entered before the rule took effect, and the circuit court of appeals decided the case without reference to the rule, on remand of an interpleader proceeding, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 22, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, relating to interpleader, was applicable in the district court.[99] Inclusion in an answer of a contention subject to being stricken out as having been passed on adversely by the circuit court of appeals precludes any inference of waiver depriving defendants of the point if the case should be taken to the supreme court.[1]

Dismissal or nonsuit. The lower court generally may and should, either of its own motion or on motion of a party, dismiss the action after it has been remanded only where in so doing it acts in obedience to the mandate or in conformity to the judgment and opinion of the appellate court.[2] Ordi-

Where, in suit to enjoin claimant to land underlying bay from prosecuting in state court proceeding on order against contractor to show cause why contractor should not be restrained from dredging land under contract with United States, final decree in favor of the United States was required to be reversed because case had become moot prior to final hearing, claimant was not entitled to reversal of decree on merits so that on remand she could claim and recover damages for dredging of her land, where claimant had not theretofore claimed damages, since, not having claimed damages before case became moot, claimant could not subsequently assert claim for damages in same case.—Newcomb v. Motion held proper

Where all questions involved were decided by circuit court of appeals in reversing decree and remanding, complaint would be dismissed by district court on merits on motion, notwithstanding better practice required to move for dismissal when cause was reached on calendar, where no objection was made to bringing matter before court by way of motion. Such motion to dismiss complaint would be granted as against contention that motion was premature in being made before time expired within which plaintiff might apply for writ of certiorari to supreme court, where no stay in proceeding was applied for or granted, no application for writ of certiorari was made, and issuance of mandate of circuit court of appeals was not stayed and was narily after a judgment has been reversed on appeal and the cause remanded the case stands, with respect to plaintiff's right to take a voluntary nonsuit, in the same relative position which it occupied before the trial in the first instance,[3] and where the reversal was with instructions to proceed in accordance with the opinion, permitting plaintiff to dismiss the action without prejudice, under a statute authorizing such procedure before the final submission of the case, was held not error.[4] A decree directing an accounting, entered pursuant to the mandate of the circuit court of appeals, is in effect the decree of that court, and while it remains in effect the trial court can give the master no different authority.[5]

Costs of reference after remand may be taxed in accordance with a stipulation entered into between the parties.[6]

(f) Enforcement of Judgment

The lower court has the power and duty to enforce a judgment in that court after decision of an appeal to the circuit court of appeals; and, where the mandate of the appellate court fully shows the decree, a new judgment in the district court is not prerequisite to issuance of execution.

Where the judgment is in the lower court, either by reason of its original judgment having been simply affirmed or a judgment having been entered by it in pursuance of the mandate of the appellate court or the judgment of the appellate court having been sent back to it for execution, the lower court has the power and duty to enforce it, by execution or otherwise.[7] Where the circuit court of appeals modifies a decree of the district court and affirms it, and the mandate to the district court fully shows the modified decree which provides for enforcement by execution, a new judgment in the district court is not required to be entered before execution can issue.[8]

(g) Rendition and Entry of Judgment as Directed

aa. In general

bb. Inclusion of interest and costs

aa. In General

Where the mandate of the circuit court of appeals directs a certain judgment, the district court should, on the day when the mandate is received, enter a judgment conforming to such directions; and if the directions are general or implied it should render a judgment that will give effect to, and be within the scope of, the decision and directions of the appellate court.

While the party prevailing on the appeal is not entitled to judgment on the mandate without retrial where a judgment was reversed by the circuit court of appeals without entry of judgment or direction thereof,[9] on the filing of a mandate or remittitur of the appellate court directing a certain judgment the lower court has no discretion but must comply therewith by entering a judgment conforming to such directions.[10] In such case the mandate requires of the district court the doing of a purely ministerial or clerical act, and appellant is entitled, on the day the mandate is received, to have the decree entered without any application on his part; and if through no fault of appellant the decree is not entered on the day the mandate is received, the adverse party would nevertheless be obligated as of that date to fulfill the terms and conditions of the decree which should have been entered.[11] The entry, however, of a judgment or decree in substantial compliance with the directions contained in the mandate is proper and sufficient,[12] and it is proper for the district court to make additional orders not directed by the appellate court but which are a necessary consequence of the judgment directed.[13] So, where the directions are general or implied, the lower court should render a judgment or decree that will give effect to the decision and directions of the appellate court and yet be within the scope thereof and not inconsistent therewith.[14] Frequently it is contemplated that an entirely new or a modified judgment or decree shall be entered.[15] A judgment in the district court in accordance with the mandate of the circuit court of appeals presents no possible error.[16]

bb. Inclusion of Interest and Costs

The district court must comply with the directions of the mandate with respect to the awarding of interest and costs, and is without power to allow interest after affirmance of a judgment not allowing interest, although interest may be awarded where it is authorized by statute, by the judgment as affirmed, or by the mandate and opinion of the appellate court.

The district court is without power to allow interest after affirmance of a judgment not allowing interest,[17] but where a judgment allowing interest is affirmed in part the lower court may compute interest on the part affirmed,[18] and, of course, interest may be allowed where so authorized by statute.[19] So where the circuit court of appeals did not discuss interest in its opinion, but the legal result of its decision was that interest, as an incident of the debt, followed it, the district court in determining the amount due plaintiff rightfully must consider interest.[20] A rule of the circuit court of appeals that interest may be allowed if specifically directed by the court, adopted at a time when no appeal could be taken from an interlocutory decree, and consequently when every appeal involved damages and interest, does not cover appeals from interlocutory decrees so far as interest is concerned, and does not preclude an allowance of interest by the district court after affirmance of judgment on such appeal.[21]

After remand the lower court must comply with whatever directions are contained in the mandate as to costs.[22] After reversal or modification in equity and admiralty the district court has discretion as to the award of costs in that court, unless the opinion or the mandate of the appellate court gives instructions with respect to such costs;[23] and where the opinion and mandate are silent on costs in the trial court the district court has discretion to cut down the cost theretofore allowed.[24] A motion to apportion costs already taxed among various defendants in an action still pending in the district court after affirmance of an interlocutory decree thereof by the circuit court of appeals is not beyond the power of the district court to grant.[25] Where the mandate of the circuit court of appeals was filed and judgment pursuant thereto was entered after the effective date of the Federal Rules

Setting aside judgment

Where judgment of district court was reversed with directions to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction, order of district court setting aside judgment entered after reversal of original judgment was not error, although not directed by circuit court of appeals, since district court could not have rendered binding judgment, being without jurisdiction.—Green v. City of Stuart, C.C.A.Fla., 101 F.2d 309, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 827, 307 U.S. 626, 83 L.Ed. 1510.

Entry in precise words of mandate

A district court decree, entered pursuant to, and for all practical purposes in precise words of, apparently complete and explicit mandate of circuit court of appeals, to which party complaining of mandate as not giving all relief sought by such party did not seasonably apply for modification thereof, was not erroneous.—Grove Laboratories v. 25. Decree held interlocutory within rule

In action for infringement of patents and unfair competition, district court decree referring costs to master, to determine amount of gains and profits realized by defendant and damages sustained by plaintiff and retaining cause in such court for disposition of master's report and such relief thereon as the court may determine was only interlocutory decree by which court retained jurisdiction to hear one defendant's motion to apportion costs taxed, although another defendant appealed to circuit court of appeals which affirmed it as to such appellant's personal liability for gains and profits only without referring to costs in its opinion.—General Motors Corporation v. Franklin Die Casting Co., D.C.Ill., 41 F.Supp. 340.

of Civil Procedure, those rules were controlling on the subject of retaxing costs as far as applicable.[26]

(h) Restitution

The reversal of a judgment gives rise to a right of restitution of money or property taken in the enforcement thereof, which restitution may be enforced by the lower court by summary proceedings as part of the original action or by a distinct independent action.

The reversal of a judgment or decree gives rise to a right in favor of the party who has lost money or property by reason of the judgment or decree to have restitution made thereof,[27] and power to enforce the right of restitution is usually possessed by the lower court as a matter of inherent right.[28] This rule entitles a successful appellant to recover from a party who has received and retained money which has been paid under the judgment.[29] The condition of the restoration, however, is always that the party against whom restitution is sought shall have received, by virtue of the decree, what he is asked to restore,[30] and reversal of a decree granting an injunction does not entitle defendant to recover damages alleged to have resulted incidentally from the injunction.[31] If property has passed into the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value there can be no recovery in specie.[32]

Remedies and proceedings. The right of restitution may be enforced by summary proceedings in the trial court as a part of the original action,[33] or by a distinct independent action,[34] which must usually be in the nature of an action for money or property had and received where the recovery of personal property or money is all that is sought.[35] Proceedings for restitution, whether by motion or independent action, are governed by broad equitable considerations and their maintainability is a question ex æquo et bono, as in the case of suits for money or property had and received.[36] Where no specific property is sought to be recovered, a right of restitution, enforceable by an action for money had and received, does not entitle the person who has paid the money under a reversed judgment to a preferential claim or lien against the property of the person receiving the money.[37] As in other actions or proceedings, the evidence must be sufficient to establish the matters to be proved.[38]

(i) New Trial

Even without a specific order a new trial is ordinarily necessary where the case has been reversed and remanded generally without directions to the contrary, although under the terms of a particular mandate a new trial may be unnecessary. Where a new trial is had, it should be confined to the issues designated in the mandate, but if there is no such designation all pertinent issues left undetermined by the appellate court may be retried.

Apportionment

Where, in a suit for foreclosure of railroad mortgages, one mortgagee was adjudged to have the prior lien on all the property, which decision was reversed on appeal, and appellant held to have the first lien on a part of the road, but pending the appeal the property had been sold as an entirety and the road junked as permitted by the decree of confirmation which was not objected to or appealed from, so that the property on which appellant had the first lien could not be returned, the only way of restitution was by apportioning the purchase money according to the interests of the parties.—Kansas City Southern Ry. General rules as to the conduct of the trial, evidence, and instructions control.

Even without a specific order to that effect, it is usually held that a new trial is intended by the circuit court of appeals and necessary where the case has been reversed and remanded generally without directions to the contrary,[39] particularly where the facts are disputed.[40] If the appellate court has unconditionally ordered a new trial, the lower court cannot make the payment of costs of the former trial a condition precedent to the new trial.[41] Where the mandate on reversal of a judgment for plaintiff contained a direction to grant a new trial, sustain the plea of the statute of limitations, and enter a judgment for defendant, the mandate does not make a new trial compulsory, but merely allows plaintiff one if he desires it, the further directions to govern if he elects to take a new trial; hence, after the trial court has entered an order granting a new trial, plaintiff may take a voluntary nonsuit.[42] After the appellate court, on defendant's appeal, has decided the law in defendant's favor, plaintiff is in no position to urge a new trial on grounds set forth by defendant before the appeal.[43]

A mandate expressly or in effect ordering a new trial is sufficiently complied with if there is a judicial examination of the issues between the parties, whether they are of law or of fact.[44] Where the view taken by the circuit court of appeals directing a new trial makes another trial a useless proceeding, a new trial will be ordered by the district court to the extent that the case be again listed on the trial calendar, and the district court will then grant motions for dismissal.[45]

Scope of issues. Where on remanding a cause the circuit court of appeals has expressly or in effect given directions as to the issues to be tried, the new trial may and should be confined to the issues designated.[46] If the appeal is taken generally from the entire judgment of the lower court, a reversal and remand for a new trial, without any limitations or issues being specified, is usually held to vacate completely the judgment of the lower court and open the whole case up for a new trial as to all issues.[47] As noted supra subdivision a (9) (b) bb of this section, issues which have been decided by the appellate court, whose decision thereon has become the law of the case, cannot be relitigated. Conversely, where the case has been opened for retrial practically all pertinent issues left undetermined by the appellate court may be retried;[48] but there can be no trial of issues not made by the pleadings.[49]

Conduct of new trial. If the evidence or facts produced on the second trial are substantially the same as on the first trial, the trial court may and should follow the appellate court's decision as to whether or not the case[50] or certain issues[51] should be submitted to the jury, or a verdict instructed or directed for plaintiff[52] or defendant.[53] On a trial had before a jury, a direction of a verdict for plaintiff is not a violation of the decision of the circuit court of appeals on a prior appeal that the trial court committed error in refusing defendant's demand for a jury trial.[54] Where on the former trial, as well as on appeal, the parties treated a defense as in issue and argued thereon, it cannot be successfully urged on the second trial that such defense was waived as not within the objections raised.[55] On retrial where the parties waived a jury trial, the district court will find the facts specially, state separately its conclusions of law thereon and its order for the entry of the appropriate judgment in accordance with the federal practice.[56]

Evidence. If it is material to the issues properly triable practically any competent evidence is admissible.[57] The evidence received on the first trial is admissible,[58] but the parties are not confined to this and are entitled to introduce additional evidence.[59] Counsel can waive objections to the competency of evidence notwithstanding the prior judgment was reversed because of the admission of similar evidence in the earlier trial.[60] The lower court should direct a verdict against a party whose testimony is wholly inconsistent with that given by him on the first trial.[61]

Instructions conforming to the law of the case as settled on the former appeal are proper.[62]

(j) Failure to Follow Decision or Comply with Mandate

Enforcement of the mandate of the circuit court of appeals may be by mandatory order of the court, application to the trial or appellate court for correction of the judgment, or appeal and reversal.

Error of the trial court in failing to follow the law of the case as laid down by the decision of the circuit court of appeals may be remedied or corrected by another appellate proceeding and reversal.[63] Under proper circumstances the procedure or remedy to obtain enforcement of the appellate court's mandate may be by mandatory order of the appellate court requiring the lower court to comply with the former's mandate,[64] application to the lower court by motion, petition, or bill of review for correction or amendment of the judgment or decree,[65] or a similar application to the appellate court,[66] or another appeal and reversal.[67]

(10) Jurisdiction and Proceedings of Appellate Court after Remand

While the jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals over a cause generally ceases on the opening of another term after the mandates have issued, in a proper case the court, after remand, has jurisdiction of proceedings for construction or clarification of the mandate, for rehearing, for recall, amendment, or correction of the mandate, and for vacation or modification of its judgment.

As a general rule jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals over a cause ceases on the opening of another term after the mandates have issued.[68] However, although the mandate has gone down, the circuit court of appeals has jurisdiction at a subsequent term to order the judge to determine in the first instance whether the use of certain exhibits, inadvertently overlooked, should be enjoined.[69] Where a suit to enjoin enforcement of a decree was instituted while the decree was still before the circuit court of appeals for enforcement by its mandate, and on rule to show cause why prosecution of the injunction suit should not be restrained, the character of such suit was disclosed on a full hearing, the circuit court of appeals had jurisdiction to determine whether the filing and maintenance thereof was in contempt of its jurisdiction, and if so to punish it by a compensatory imposition, or to remand the case to the district court for that purpose.[70]

Construction or clarification of mandate. The circuit court of appeals has power to construe its mandate whenever it becomes advisable to do so,[71] at least where the relief was requested before expiration of the term at which the mandate was issued,[72] the matter being entirely discretionary with the court,[73] which will exercise its discretion to construe the mandate when it expressed what the court intended, but it was possible that the trial court may have misconceived its purport when entering the decrees directed.[74] If clarification of the mandate is necessary, a motion of the parties asking the circuit court of appeals to state what the mandate means is a proper method of obtaining clarification.[75] Since a mandate directing the district judge to modify the judgment in accordance with the opinion of the appellate court deals with the substance, not the form, of the judgment to be entered, it is not the function of the circuit court of appeals on motion for clarification of the mandate to give an advisory opinion regarding the form of the judgment, such as whether the judgment should embody the facts as found in the opinion of the appellate court, nor will the court on such a motion determine questions which were not decided by the trial judge nor argued on appeal.[76]

Rehearing. Only the circuit court of appeals in which review was had has jurisdiction to entertain a petition for a rehearing.[77]

Recall, amendment, or correction of mandate. The circuit court of appeals has power to recall the mandate and rehear a case at the term at which its judgment therein was rendered,[78] but has no power to recall its mandate where the term has expired since the mandate went down;[79] the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 6 (c), which provides that the expiration of a term of court in no way affects the power of a court to do any act in any civil action which has been pending before it, does not apply to the circuit court of appeals.[80] It is not necessary that a mandate already issued be recalled before an appeal can be taken to the supreme court.[81] Generally the court will not recall its mandate for correction in the absence of inadvertence, accident, or mistake,[82] and will not recall the mandate for the purpose of reëxamining the cause on the merits[83] or hearing an application to intervene,[84] nor will a motion to recall a mandate be granted where the alleged error therein resulted from petitioner's delay in bringing matters to the attention of the appellate court.[85] Where the mandate is adequate without amendment, the circuit court of appeals will deny a motion to amend, with an expression of its views for the guidance of the district court;[86] and a motion to amend will be denied where there has been no mistake, fraud, or imposition.[87] Where the mandate has gone down, it cannot be amended or corrected in matters of substance after the expiration of the term.[88] An alleged right to modification of the mandate may be lost by laches.[89]

A mandate may be recalled and modified on motion to provide specifically for interest on the judgment affirmed to the date of the entry of the judgment on the mandate,[90] or to provide that the district court might permit the intervention of a trustee in bankruptcy;[91] and, where plaintiff objects to a summary conclusion by the circuit court of appeals on appeal from a judgment denying defendant's motion to modify a default judgment, he is entitled to a modification of the mandate modifying the judgment so as to reverse the judgment and direct defendant to answer.[92] A simple entry of "judgment reversed" without a direction for a new trial occurring in the mandate is not a mistake warranting the recall and amendment of the mandate.[93] Where the mandate provided that merchandise seized be returned unless a libel for forfeiture thereof be filed within a stated time, and it subsequently appeared that such a libel was pending when the mandate was issued, the mandate need not be amended, since the pendency of the libel would be considered equivalent to the required filing within the stated period.[94] Where a party was adjudicated a bankrupt before issuance of a mandate directing modification of an order denying a motion to compel return of books seized under a search warrant, whether the party's attorneys had a charging lien on such books under state law could be determined by the bankruptcy court, and not by the circuit court of appeals on motion to amend its mandate.[95] Inasmuch as costs of appeal automat-

Vacation or modification of judgment. The circuit court of appeals has power to enter a decree supplemental to another decree entered at the same term of court;[97] but it has no power to alter its decision after the term at which it was rendered,[98] although it may thereafter correct clerical errors or mere matters of form.[99]

b. Liabilities on Bonds and Undertakings

(1) In general
(2) Performance or breach of conditions
(3) Extent of liability
(4) Actions
(5) Summary remedies

(1) In General

The rights, liabilities, and obligations of a surety on a bond given on appeal are fixed by its conditions read in the light of the statute and the order under which it is given; a bond is valid as a statutory obligation if it complies substantially with statutory requirements and is supported by a consideration.

In general the rights, liabilities, and obligations of a surety on a bond given on appeal are fixed by its conditions read in the light of the statute and order under which it is given and cannot be changed or enlarged by the principal or court beyond the terms of the obligation.[1] In order for the bond to be valid as a statutory obligation the exact form or language of the statute need not be followed if the condition expressed is of substantially the same import,[2] or if it is made substantially as is required by the statute.[3] Failure to recite the nature of the action or the court to which the appeal is prayed does not render the bond invalid where there is sufficient certainty to prevent a second recovery.[4]

An appeal bond without consideration is void and cannot be enforced.[5] Except where the bond is regarded as binding on the theory of estoppel or,

Particular bonds construed

(1) Bond given by administrator to have reviewed judgment against deceased was supersedeas bond requiring surety to answer all damages and costs where judgment was sustained.—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Jones, C.C.A.Ill., 49 F.2d 559.

(2) Bonds given by lessee of oil and gas lease in suit involving determination of lessor's title to realty, given to protect adverse claimants in event of judgment in their favor, were held not intended to protect lessor and legatee claiming under her.—Folk v. Monsell, C.C.A.Okl., 71 F.2d 816.

(3) An appeal bond requiring appellant to "answer all damages and costs that may be awarded against him" was not merely a "bond for costs and special damages" but was a "bond for amount of judgment appealed from" with interest and costs, where judgment was for recovery of money and order granting appeal provided that bond should operate as a supersedeas.—Martin v. Clarke, C.C.A.Ill., 105 F.2d 685, 124 A.L.R. 497.

(4) Where condition of bond was that an appeal should be prosecuted to effect and all damages and costs paid if appeal was not made good, bond was a "cost bond" and not a "supersedeas bond."—The Astoria, D.C.N.Y., 1 F.R.D. 742.

under the particular circumstances, the bond may be given effect as a common-law or voluntary obligation, where no appeal can lawfully be taken in a given case, a bond given for no other purpose than the taking of such an appeal is wholly without consideration and therefore void,[6] but where an appeal is taken, even though improperly taken and improperly allowed, and the court takes jurisdiction, the bond on appeal is valid, and action thereupon will lie for the reason that there is a consideration for the bond and an estoppel arises against those who obtained the contemplated advantages pending the disposition of the appeal.[7]

(2) Performance or Breach of Conditions
- (a) Condition to prosecute with effect
- (b) Condition to pay or satisfy judgment
- (c) Nonperformance excused and sureties discharged
- (d) Effect of other bond in same proceeding

(a) Condition to Prosecute with Effect

A condition to prosecute an appeal with effect is breached unless appellant secures a reversal of the judgment appealed from or is partially successful in the prosecution of the appeal.

A condition to prosecute an appeal with effect, as usually construed, means to prosecute it successfully,[8] or to secure a reversal of the judgment appealed from.[9] So failure to perfect an appeal has been regarded as a breach of the condition, fixing the sureties with liability.[10] A mere interlocutory order, remitting the record for a finding by a referee, is not a final judgment either of affirmance or of reversal and does not show that appellant has prosecuted his appeal with effect.[11] An appeal is not prosecuted to effect if the judgment is affirmed;[12] but partial success in the prosecution of an appeal is a compliance with a condition to prosecute with effect,[13] and there is no breach where the judgment is reduced and affirmance is entered only on condition of filing a remittitur for the amount of the reduction.[14] A voluntary dismissal by appellant is a breach of the condition to prosecute with effect.[15] On termination of the appeal in his favor, appellant is entitled to the discharge of the bond.[16]

(b) Condition to Pay or Satisfy Judgment

There is not a breach of a condition to pay or satisfy the judgment appealed from if affirmed in case of affirmance in part. Payment of a judgment which is affirmed releases both the principal and sureties from liability on a bond conditioned on such payment.

A condition to pay the judgment has been implied from a condition to prosecute with effect.[17] Under a condition to pay the judgment if affirmed, it has been held that there is not such an affirmance as will impose liability on the bond where the final judgment based on the claim against appellant as defendant below and the denial of his claim of set-off is reversed because of errors affecting the set-off with directions to permit the verdict upholding appellee's cause of action to stand.[18] Whatever operates as a legal satisfaction of the judgment operates to discharge the bond as to both principal and sureties.[19]

(c) Nonperformance Excused and Sureties Discharged

Mere delay in prosecuting the appeal does not discharge the sureties, but they may be discharged by dismissal by agreement between appellant and appellee without their consent, or fraud.

Mere delay on the part of appellant in prosecuting or perfecting the appeal does not discharge the sureties on the appeal bond or undertaking;[20] but it has been held that dismissal, pursuant to an agreement between appellant and appellee, entered into for a consideration moving to appellant, without the knowledge or consent of the surety, discharges the surety.[21] An appeal bond cannot be enforced against the obligors, where the judgment was procured by false and fraudulent statements to the court preventing a rehearing and a modification of the original decree.[22]

(d) Effect of Other Bond in Same Proceeding

Successive appeal bonds given in the same case are cumulative, and the final judgment fixes the liability.

Successive appeal bonds given in the same proceeding on further appeal have been regarded as cumulative, and liability on the first bond is fixed by the intermediate judgment of affirmance, which in turn is superseded by the second bond, and the final judgment of affirmance fixes the liability on both.[23]

(3) Extent of Liability

The obligation of a surety on an appeal bond is strictissimi juris, and must be determined in accordance with the provisions of the applicable rule of the circuit court of appeals as interpreted and applied by the supreme court.

The general rule that the obligation of a surety is strictissimi juris, that is, that he has the right to stand on the precise terms of his contract, and his liability cannot be extended by construction or implication, which is noted in the C.J.S. title Principal and Surety § 101, also 50 C.J. p 78 note 71–p 79 note 73, has been applied or recognized in respect of sureties on appeal bonds.[24]

The scope of liability under a supersedeas bond must be determined in accordance with the provisions of the applicable rule of the circuit court of appeals as interpreted and applied by the supreme court.[25] Under a rule generally prevalent in the various circuits, and which has been embodied in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 73 (d), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, supersedeas bonds are classified as: (1) Those in which the judgment or decree is for the recovery of money not otherwise secured. (2) Those in which the property in controversy necessarily follows the suit, as in real actions, suits on mortgages, etc., or where the property or the proceeds thereof is in the custody of the court. Different liabilities are provided for each class. Thus, under a rule providing that indemnity in cases of the second class will be required only in an amount sufficient to secure the sum recovered for the use and detention of the property, and the cost of the suit and just damages for delay, and costs and interest on the appeal, the only basis of recovery on a bond given on appeal from a decree foreclosing a mortgage is the costs of the appeal which accrued in the appellate court, depreciation of the property in market value pending the appeal, deterioration by waste or want of repair or accumulation of taxes or other burdens, and the use and detention of the property pending the appeal.[26] Applying this principle, it has been held that a bond given in such a case does not cover interest accumulating on the mortgage debt during the appeal, but only interest included in damages due to delay;[27] that it does not include compensation to the trustee or receiver, or fees of the trustee's counsel;[28] that it covers only the ordinary taxable costs allowed the successful party by the appellate court, and does not include lower court costs or costs on appellee's motion to dismiss the appeal;[29] that it does not cover an accumulation of interest on a sum paid to the receiver by a purchaser at a foreclosure sale subsequently held unauthorized on appeal;[30] that interest is allowable on the purchase price of the mortgaged property for the period of delay occasioned in the sale of the property by the unsuccessful appeal[31] from which interest earned on money paid the receiver by the purchaser at the unauthorized foreclosure sale is not deductible;[32] that the cost of readvertising the property, made necessary by the stay, may be recovered;[33] and that it does not cover the premium on a receiver's bond pending the appeal.[34] Damages on a bond issued for supersedeas which prevented and delayed payment, as ordered, of funds in the hands of a receiver include such items for expenses as premiums on the receiver's bond, taxes, office expenses, and premiums on depository bonds, every item of which was necessitated by the granting of the appeal; and such damages are recoverable although the decree appealed from provided that payments could be made to those entitled thereto on giving refunding bonds. Furthermore, in such case the difference between the legal rate of interest and the interest earned on the funds while in the hands of the receiver is recoverable.[35] It has been held, however, that an appeal bond given on appeal from a decree awarding to one of the parties a fund which has been paid into the registry of the court in interpleader proceedings and deposited at interest does not bind appellant, on an affirmance, to pay interest on such fund not awarded by the appellate court, in the absence of proof of misconduct on his part, where appellee has received the fund, with its accumulations.[36]

Where the judgment or decree is for the recovery of money not otherwise secured, the indemnity of the supersedeas bond, by the terms of the rule of procedure referred to in the preceding paragraph must be for the whole amount of the judgment or decree, including just damages for delay, and costs and interest on the appeal; hence the surety is liable for the amount of the judgment[37] with interest and costs,[38] including costs in the lower court.[39]

It has been held that an appeal bond conditioned to pay all costs, which is not a supersedeas, covers only the costs in the appellate court, and not those in the trial court,[40] and that a bond obligating the surety to pay all damages and costs merely means damages for delay in proceeding with the appeal, and is intended to cover costs in the appellate court only, so that the surety cannot be held liable for the amount awarded by the final decree.[41] On the other hand, however, it has been held that the surety is liable for costs in both courts where the obligation of the bond is to pay all cost,[42] or all costs that may be adjudged or awarded,[43] or to answer all damages and costs.[44]

Revival of money judgment

Where the judgment in the court below revived a money judgment against defendants, who were husband and wife, and also subjected certain real estate belonging to the wife to the payment of the judgment, and both appealed, joining in a supersedeas bond with a surety, on reversal of as much of the decree as affected the real estate and affirmance of the rest of the decree the signers of the bond were liable thereon for the payment of the money judgment and costs up to the amount of the penalty named therein.—Richards v. (4) Actions

The liability of the principal and sureties on appeal and supersedeas bonds may be enforced by an action on the bond in which general principles relating to procedural matters are applicable.

On a breach of the conditions of a valid and sufficient bond or undertaking given on appeal, the liability of the principal and sureties may be enforced by an action on the bond.[45] Action against the surety may be started by filing in the district court a præcipe for a writ of scire facias,[46] and it is no ground of objection to such a writ that the surety was not a party to the original action.[47] The writ in such a case is original only in the sense that, once obtained, the resultant procedure is the same as in any action at law entitling defendant to answer and to a jury trial.[48]

Where, by virtue of an attachment, there is a lien on the lands of the judgment debtor, it is not a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action on the appeal bond that the obligee first enforce and exhaust his remedy of enforcing the lien by having the land sold;[49] nor is the issuance, and return unsatisfied, of an execution against the principal a condition precedent to such an action.[50]

As a general rule, the only defense which a surety on an appeal bond can interpose after affirmance of the judgment is one which discharges him from his obligation in whole or in part.[51]

The court in which the original action was tried has jurisdiction of an action on the appeal bond.[52]

Where the bond as regards the obligees is joint, all obligees should be joined as parties plaintiff,[53] except where the bond, although joint in form, expresses distinct obligations to the different obligees.[54] The general rule, stated in the C.J.S. title Parties §§ 43, 46, also 47 C.J. p 85 note 31, p 89 note 93, that, where several parties are jointly liable on a contract, they must all be made parties defendant applies to actions on appeal bonds.[55] A coappellant appealing from a part of the decree which did not delay distribution of funds in the hands of the court, as did the supersedeas granted appellant, and who did not apply for supersedeas, is not a necessary party to an action on the supersedeas bond.[56] A judgment defendant is not a necessary party to a suit by the surety on his supersedeas bond brought after affirmance of the judgment to enjoin prosecution of an action on the bond by the judgment plaintiff.[57]

General rules of pleading usually apply.[58] Where, in an action on an appeal bond, a special breach of condition is assigned, a general plea of non damnificatus is not good.[59]

General rules of evidence are applicable.[60]

Johnson, C. C.A.Neb., 1 F.2d 212.

forcement of this remedy may be affected by the pendency of attachment proceedings in another court.

It is expressly provided by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 73 (f), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, that by entering into an appeal or supersedeas bond the surety submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court[61] and that his liability may be enforced on motion without the necessity of an independent action; and accordingly a motion for judgment against the surety is the appropriate manner in which to seek that judgment.[62] A judgment against the surety cannot stand, however, where the notice required by the rule was not given,[63] and in such case the judgment should be vacated either on motion of a party affected thereby[64] or by the court on its own motion.[65]

Where, pending appeal from a judgment of the federal district court, attachment proceedings are instituted in a state court by a creditor of the judgment creditor against the judgment defendant and his surety, if the attachment suit has been prosecuted to a successful conclusion and the judgment debtor has been compelled to pay to the attaching creditor, on affirmance of the judgment by the circuit court of appeals the district court must refuse to enter judgment on the supersedeas bond,[66] and if the attachment proceedings are still pending at the time of the affirmance of the judgment in the federal court, according to the decisions of the various courts on the subject, the judgment cred-

Under former practice

(1) In the absence of express statutory authority covering the case in question, a summary judgment on an appeal bond could not be rendered by either the trial or the appellate court, and where the court lacked statutory authority to render such a judgment in a given case, even a stipulation in the bond that summary judgment could be rendered against the sureties was ineffectual.—Montgomery v. Realty Acceptance Corporation, D.C.Del., 15 F.Supp. 665, 667, quoting Corpus Juris, and affirmed, C.C.A., American Employers' Ins. Co. v. Montgomery, 101 F.2d 1005, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 833, two cases, 307 U.S. 629, 83 L.Ed. 1512 and U. S. Casualty Co. v. Montgomery, 59 S.Ct. 833, 307 U.S. 629, 83 L.Ed. 1512.

(2) State statutes authorizing the court to render summary judgment against the sureties in certain cases were followed in actions at law in the federal courts by virtue of the statute providing for conformity to state practice.—Montgomery v. Realty Acceptance Corporation, supra, quoting Corpus Juris—Empire State-Idaho Mining & Developing Co. v. Hanley, Idaho, 136 F. 99, 69 C.C.A. 87, appeal dismissed 25 S.Ct. 691, 198 U.S. 292, 49 L.Ed. 1056—25 C.J. p 825 note 75.

(3) But where no statute of this nature existed in a state where a particular federal court was held, a summary judgment on the bond in such an action could not be rendered by that federal court, there being no federal statute expressly authorizing it.—Lamon v. Speer Hardware Co., Okl., 198 F. 453, 119 C.C.A. 1—Montgomery v. Realty Acceptance Corporation, supra, quoting Corpus Juris.

(4) In suits in equity, however, the federal courts had inherent power, irrespective of the state practice, to render summary judgment against sureties on appeal bonds.—Pease v. Rathbun-Jones Engineering Co., Tex., 37 S.Ct. 283, 243 U.S. 273, 61 L.Ed. 715, Ann.Cas.1918C 1147, affirming 228 F. 273, 142 C.C.A. 565—Brame v. Keystone Credit Corporation, C.C.A.Va., 76 F.2d 328, certiorari denied 56 S.Ct. 104, 296 U.S. 591, 80 L.Ed. 418—American Trust Co. v. Speers Sand & Clay Works, D.C.Md., 60 F.2d 994—Robertson v. Wilkinson, C.C.A.Tex., 10 F.2d 311—Medusa Concrete Waterproofing Co. v. McCormick Waterproof Portland Cement Co., C.C.A. Ill., 266 F. 981—Richards v. Harrison, D.C.Iowa, 218 F. 134—Perry v. Tacoma Mill Co., Wash., 152 F. 115, 81 C.C.A. 333.

(5) In issuing its mandate after affirmance of a final decree in a patent infringement suit, the circuit court of appeals had jurisdiction to direct, and did not err in directing, entry of a summary decree against the sureties on supersedeas bonds for the amount due, although the sureties had been enjoined by another court from complying with the decree, or from using money deposited by their principal for that purpose, and the banks in which it was deposited had been enjoined from paying it out.—Toledo Scale Co. v. Computing Scale Co., Ill., 43 S.Ct. 458, 261 U.S. 399, 67 L.Ed. 719, affirming, C.C.A., 281 F. 488, certiorari granted 42 S.Ct. 585, 259 U.S. 579, 66 L.Ed. 1072 and 42 S.Ct. 587, 259 U.S. 579, 66 L.Ed. 1073.

(6) It was not a good defense that the judgment debtor was solvent.—Egan v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., C.C.Iowa, 163 F. 344.

(7) Nor was it a valid objection that the court had no jurisdiction because there was an adequate remedy at law on the bond.—Pease v. Rathbun-Jones Engineering Co., 37 S.Ct. 283, 243 U.S. 273, 61 L.Ed. 715, Ann. Cas.1918C, 1147, affirming 228 F. 273, 142 C.C.A. 565.

(8) Even if notice to the sureties was essential, want of notice was waived where the sureties subsequently asked a decision on the question of their liability under the evidence.—Pease v. Rathbun-Jones Engineering Co., supra.

(9) The judgment was required to be rendered and entered at the time contemplated by statute.—Fuller v. Aylesworth, Mich., 75 F. 694, 21 C.C. A. 505—4 C.J. p 1308 note 54.

(10) Judgment in district court on supersedeas bond against appellant and surety was improper, where made possible by plaintiff's false statements to the circuit court of appeals, procuring it to reverse a decree in part.—Harrison v. Richards, Iowa, 226 F. 196, 141 C.C.A. 194.

itor is entitled to have judgment entered in his favor against the surety, but execution on the judgment must be withheld pending determination of the attachment suit.[67]

XI. DISTRICT COURTS

§ 302. Creation and Constitution

The district courts are created and established by congress pursuant to the authority vested in it by the constitution.

The federal district courts are created and established by congress pursuant to the authority vested in it by the Constitution.[68]

Circuit courts, as appears infra § 308, were, until the district courts replaced them, federal courts of general original jurisdiction, except as to a limited number of matters, jurisdiction of which was specifically vested in the district court.

Three-judge court. The provision for a three-judge court to hear an application for an injunction to restrain enforcement of a state statute on the ground of its unconstitutionality is considered in the C.J.S. title Injunctions § 169, also 32 C.J. p 290 notes 30–39, and appeals directly from such a court to the United States supreme court are treated supra § 211. The three-judge court provided for to hear applications to enjoin, annul, or set aside orders of the interstate commerce commission is considered in Commerce § 148 [d] (3).

Expedition court. Under express statutory provision, in any suit in equity brought in a district court by the United States under the anti-trust laws, if the attorney general files a certificate that the case is of public importance, the case must be expedited in every way, and be assigned for hearing at the earliest practicable day before a court, commonly referred to as an "Expedition Court," consisting of not less than three of the circuit judges of the circuit, or designated substitutes for them.[69]

§ 303. —— Judicial Districts

As a rule a district court has jurisdiction throughout and territorially coextensive with its district, such jurisdiction being unaffected by a mere multiplication of places of holding court or the creation of divisions within the district. The transfer of territory from one district to another does not abolish the original district.

The United States is, by statute, divided into judicial districts, in each of which a district court is held.[70] As a rule, a district court has jurisdiction throughout and territorially coextensive with its district,[71] and a mere multiplication of places of holding court, or the creation of divisions, does not affect this jurisdiction, the court being regarded as one and the same tribunal regardless of whether it sits in one or a number of places or divisions.[72] The rule is otherwise, however, where the act creating a new division of a district manifests an intention that the court established therein shall be a distinct entity,[73] in which case such court has no jurisdiction outside of the division for which it is

The transfer of territory from one district to another, as where a new district is created, does not operate to abolish the original district, but merely affects its territorial jurisdiction and in some cases its name, the organization of the original district not being changed, and its officers continuing in office charged with the same duties.[76]

§ 304. —— Judges

Any duly acting district court judge constitutes a district court. If the public interest requires, the senior judge of a circuit may assign any circuit judge, including himself, to hold a district court therein, either generally, or in a particular division or term, or for a particular proceeding.

Any duly acting district court judge constitutes a district court.[77]

Circuit judges sitting as district judges. Under a federal statute, the senior circuit judge of a circuit may, if the public interest requires, designate and assign any circuit judge of the circuit to hold a district court therein.[78] The senior circuit judge may assign himself,[79] and it has even been said that in a proper case it is his duty to do so.[80] The circuit judge may be assigned generally to hold a district court in a named district,[81] or to hold a particular division of a district court, or a term of such court at one of several places fixed by law,[82] or even to hear a particular case[83] or sit in a par-

Pending actions and existing causes

(1) Under express statutory provision that, whenever a new district is established or any territory transferred from one district to another, prosecutions for crimes committed within the transferred territory prior to the transfer shall be commenced and proceeded with as if such transfer had not taken place, the original district court has jurisdiction to commence the prosecution of a crime so committed.—Lewis v. U. S., Okl., 49 S.Ct. 257, 279 U.S. 63, 73 L.Ed. 615, affirming, C.C.A., 22 F.2d 760, rehearing denied 26 F.2d 465, and certiorari granted 49 S.Ct. 11, 278 U.S. 587, 73 L.Ed. 521—Mizell v. (2) The court of the new district does not have jurisdiction thereof unless the case is transferred.—Mizell v. Vickrey, supra—Mizell v. Beard, D.C.Okl., 25 F.2d 324.

(3) However, it has been held that the provision referred to in (1) applies only to criminal cases begun before, and pending at the time of, the creation of the new district, and that, where no prosecution had been commenced at the time of its creation, the new district has jurisdiction.—Quinlan v. U. S., C.C.A.Ga., 22 F.2d 95.

(4) Under express provisions of the act creating a new district, the new court may acquire jurisdiction of all causes pending in the original court, which arose in the transferred territory, with the exception of causes in which evidence had already been taken.

Duty to consider application

Senior circuit judge could not properly decline to consider application to designate circuit judge to hold district court on theory that public interest so requires.—American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., D.C.N.Y., 4 F. Supp. 68.

Circumstances warranting designation

Senior circuit judge has judicial duty to designate circuit judge to hold district court whenever, in his judgment, any case is presented of sufficient public importance and likely to present difficult and complicated questions of law and judicial administration, if public interest so requires.—American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., supra.

79. U.S.—Johnson v. Manhattan Ry. Co., N.Y., 53 S.Ct. 721, 289 U.S. 479, 77 L.Ed. 1331, affirming in part, C.C.A., 61 F.2d 934, which reversed, D.C., 1 F.Supp. 809, and certiorari granted 53 S.Ct. 524, 289 U.S. 714, 77 L.Ed. 1467.

It is a common practice for the senior circuit judge to designate himself.—American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., D.C.N.Y., 4 F.Supp. 68.

83. U.S.—Johnson v. Manhattan Ry. Co., supra.

Contrary district court rules

While a designated circuit judge is sitting as a district judge, he must obey all valid rules of the district court applicable to the proceedings, but, if he has been assigned by the senior circuit judge to hear a particular case, he is not obliged to comply with a district court rule which would prevent him from performing his statutory duty of carrying out the assignment.—Johnson v. Manhattan Ry. Co., supra.

Senior circuit judge assigning himself

Power of senior circuit judge to assign himself to sit in particular case in district court should be exercised only in special exigencies, and then ticular part.[84] The circuit judge's determination that public interest requires such an assignment is not open to collateral attack.[85] A circuit court judge assigned to hold a district court is, while sitting as such, a district court judge for all purposes.[86]

Under a statute providing that, where the district judges do not agree on the division of business and assignment of cases for trial, the senior circuit judge shall make all necessary orders relating thereto, the senior circuit judge cannot, by first assigning himself as a district judge and in that capacity disagreeing with all the district judges, create such a disagreement as the statute contemplates so as to authorize him as senior circuit justice to assign to himself as district judge a particular case.[87]

§ 305. Character of Courts

The district court is a court of record. It is not an inferior court in the technical sense of the term.

The federal district courts are courts of record.[88] They are not inferior courts in the technical sense of the term,[89] although they have been said to be inferior in the sense that their jurisdiction is limited to that conferred by congress.[90]

§ 306. Terms and Sessions

Proceedings conducted by a district court at a term or session held without authority of law are inoperative and void; a district court may extend its terms for specified periods. A special term may be held at such place in the district as the nature of the business requires.

Proceedings conducted by a district court at a term or session held without authority of law are inoperative and void.[91] A district court is open in its entirety from the beginning of each session to its end, and may make writs returnable on the criminal side at a time when it shall have adjourned as a criminal court.[92] District courts may extend their terms for specified periods,[93] and this may be accomplished either by order in a particular case or by a general order in the form of a rule.[94]

Special terms. In view of a statute providing that a special term of any district court may be held at the same place where any regular term is held or at such other place in the district as the nature of the business may require, the fact that the place for the holding of the regular term of a district is fixed by statute does not prevent a special term thereof from being held elsewhere.[95] Under the statute providing that special terms of any district court may be ordered by the district judge, and that "any business may be transacted at such special term which might be transacted at a regular term," a district court has jurisdiction at a special term to try a defendant on an indictment returned at a previous regular term, and it is not necessary that the order for the special term be incorporated in the record of the case to show such jurisdiction.[96]

§ 307. Rules of Procedure

District courts have power to make rules not inconsistent with any law of the United States, or with with commensurate care and discretion, and a mere difference of opinion between him and district judges respecting relative fitness of individuals and trust companies as equity receivers is not proper ground for taking public carrier receivership case from district judge and bringing it before senior circuit judge under latter's order assigning case to himself.—Johnson v. Manhattan Ry. Co., supra.

84. U.S.—Johnson v. Manhattan Ry. Co., supra.

85. U.S.—Johnson v. Manhattan Ry. Co., supra.

Collateral attack is not justified on grounds that public interest did not require designation or that designation was conditioned on public interest rather than on judgment of senior circuit judge that public interest required designation, as in original statute.—Johnson v. Manhattan Ry. Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 61 F.2d 934, reversing, D.C., 1 F.Supp. 809, and certiorari granted 53 S.Ct. 524, 289 U.S. 714, 77 L.Ed. 1467, affirmed in part 53 S.Ct. 721, 289 U.S. 479, 77 L.Ed. 1331.

any rules prescribed by the supreme court, or with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure; but no rules may be adopted which alter the court's jurisdiction, change statutory or substantive law, or are unreasonable.

Although, as appears supra § 96, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure regulate many matters of practice arising in the district courts, under rule 83 thereof district courts have power to make additional rules not inconsistent with the rules provided.[97] The rules may be adopted by a majority of the district judges,[98] and they may be repealed[99] by the same authority[1] Since district courts are empowered to make such additional rules, any local district rules adopted before the effective date of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and not inconsistent with them remain in force.[2] The adoption of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure did not enlarge the jurisdiction of the district courts.[3]

Under a power to make rules of practice, a district court cannot adopt rules which alter the court's jurisdiction,[4] or change statutory or substantive law,[5] or are unreasonable.[6] Rules adopted by a district court have the force and effect of laws until set aside.[7]

Rules construed or applied

(1) Rule providing that only an attorney or proctor of the court may enter appearances for parties, sign stipulations or receive payment on judgments, decrees, or orders.—Schifrin v. Chenille Mfg. Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 117 F.2d 92, reversing, D.C., 34 F.Supp. 400, certiorari denied Chenille Mfg. Co. v. Schifrin, 61 S.Ct. 1114, 313 U.S. 590, 85 L.Ed. 1545.

(2) Rule providing that, where there is a procedural question which is not expressly covered by federal statutes or by Fed.Rules of Civ.Proc. or otherwise covered by rules of the local federal courts, the question shall be determined, if possible, by parallels or analogies furnished by such statutes and rules, but that, if no such analogies or parallels exist, then procedure prevailing in courts of equity of United States or, in default thereof, the procedure which shall then prevail in state court should be applied.—U. S. v. Certain Lands in Borough of Brooklyn, Kings County, State of New York, for the Establishment of Receiving Barracks, D.C.N.Y., 39 F.Supp. 91.

Where the procedure is jurisdictional

The special statute conferring on the district court jurisdiction of claims against the United States in certain cases also lays down the procedural requirements for invoking that jurisdiction, and Fed.Rules of Civ.Proc. cannot be applied so as to change those requirements, since so doing would in effect change the jurisdiction of the court.—Mount Tivy Winery v. "An authority conferred upon a court to make rules of procedure for the exercise of its jurisdiction is not authority to enlarge that jurisdiction."—Lowe v. U. S., D.C.N.J., 37 F.Supp. 817, 819.

Time for perfecting appeal

District court rule attempting to require filing of narrative form of testimony within forty days after entry of decree appealed from, and construed as prohibiting extension of time where application is not made within such period, was held invalid as depriving court of jurisdiction conferred by congress.—Alliance Securities Co. v. Killits, C.C.A.Ohio, 67 F.2d 480.

Requiring attorney to secure costs

Rule providing that, where a suit is instituted in forma pauperis and fee of plaintiff's counsel depends on the result, the suit cannot be prosecuted alone on plaintiff's oath of his poverty, but his counsel must likewise file such an oath, or give security for costs was not invalid as requiring the violation of any state law.—U. Enforcement

(1) It has been held that a rule governing preparation of trial calendars must be applied to all cases coming within its provisions until repealed by action of majority of judges of district.—Superior Fire Ins. Co. v. Martin, C.C.A.Ill., 80 F.2d 275, certiorari denied Camden Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Martin, 56 S.Ct. 938, 298 U.S. 672, 80 L.Ed. 1394.

(2) It has also been held that rules of court should be strictly enforced against unreasonable delays in prosecuting causes.—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Helm, C.C.A.Cal., 84 F.2d 546, reversing, D.C., Helm v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 12 F. Supp. 185, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., U. S. Fidelity Guaranty Co. v. Rules of federal courts generally are considered supra § 96.

Before the adoption of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, district courts likewise had power to adopt rules for the regulation of their practice to the extent that it might be necessary for the advancement of justice and the prevention of delay in proceedings, provided such rules were not in any manner inconsistent with any law of the United States or any rule prescribed by the supreme court.[8] The provisions of the Conformity Act, considered generally supra §§ 99–108, attached to any rules so made, the rules being required to conform as near as might be to state practice,[9] and, indeed, the adoption of the practice of state courts was proper;[10] accordingly a rule effecting an unreasonable departure from state practice was void.[11] exercise discretion in enforcement of court rule.—Holmes v. Ginter Restaurant Co., C.C.A.Mass., 54 F.2d 876.

15 C.J. p 904 note 33—25 C.J. p 827 note 18, p 974 note 92.

Construction

The rule of the district court authorizing an offer to permit entry of decree, and providing that after such offer is made no costs shall be taxed against respondent, unless a decree for a larger amount than was included in the offer is rendered, must be construed in the light of the federal statute fixing the costs. —The Bluefields, D.C.Ala., 273 F. 268.

Limitation on statutory power of circuit judge

(1) Judges of federal district court cannot, by adoption of rules, extend and enlarge their powers so as to limit or exclude statutory powers and duties of senior circuit judge duly designated to hold district court.—Johnson v. Manhattan Ry. Co., C.C.A. N.Y., 61 F.2d 934, reversing, D.C., 1 F.Supp. 809, and certiorari granted 53 S.Ct. 524, 289 U.S. 714, 77 L.Ed. 1467, affirmed in part 53 S.Ct. 721, 289 U.S. 479, 77 L.Ed. 1331—American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., D.C.N.Y., 1 F. Supp. 820.

(2) So, a rule of district court purporting to limit judges to work designated by senior district judge, and a rule requiring application for appointment of equity receivers to be made to judge holding motion part of court, and "to no other judge," were invalid as applied to circuit judges assigned to district court pursuant to statute.—Johnson v. Manhattan Ry. Co., N.Y., 53 S.Ct. 721, 289 U.S. 479, 77 L.Ed. 1331, affirming, in part, C.C.A., 61 F.2d 934, which reversed, D.C., 1 F.Supp. 809, certiorari granted 53 S.Ct. 524, 289 U.S. 714, 77 L. Ed. 1467.

Prior district court rule must give way to a subsequent equity rule with which it is at variance.—Buck v. Case, D.C.Wash., 24 F.Supp. 541, appeal dismissed in part Buck v. Gallagher, 59 S.Ct. 145, 305 U.S. 569, 83 L.Ed. 358, reversed on other grounds 59 S.Ct. 740, 307 U.S. 95, 83 L.Ed. 1128.

Concurrence of a majority of the circuit judges, required by the equity rule permitting district courts to adopt further rules, is not necessary for the validity of a rule other than an equity rule.—Johnson v. Manhattan Ry. Co., D.C.N.Y., 1 F.Supp. 809, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 61 F.2d 934, certiorari granted 53 S. Ct. 524, 289 U.S. 714, 77 L.Ed. 1467, affirmed in part 53 S.Ct. 721, 289 U. S. 479, 77 L.Ed. 1331.

Rules upheld

(1) Rule declaring what disbursements shall be taxed as costs.—Williams v. Sawyer Bros., C.C.A.N.Y., 51 F.2d 1004, 81 A.L.R. 1527.

(2) Rule depriving plaintiff of absolute right to discontinue equity suit after issue joined, even though defendant could not have affirmative relief under pleadings.—Bronx Brass Foundry v. Irving Trust Co., N.Y., 56 S.Ct. 451, 297 U.S. 230, 80 L.Ed. 657, affirming, C.C.A., In re J. R. Palmenberg Sons, 76 F.2d 935, certiorari granted Bronx Brass Foundry v. Irving Trust Co., 56 S.Ct. 117, 296 U.S. 565, 80 L.Ed. 399.

(3) Rule relating to depositions de bene esse, and providing that "upon the return of a commission the clerk shall open and file it forthwith in his office and give notice thereof by mail to the counsel for the respective parties, and any motion to suppress such commission must be made within 10 days after the mailing of said notice."—Louis Werner Stave Co. v. Marden, Orth & Hastings Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 280 F. 601.

(4) Rule requiring any amended pleading to be filed within ten days thereafter, unless for good cause further time should be given.—McMullin v. Sheehan, C.C.A.Mo., 95 F.2d 129, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 67, 305 U.S. 607, 83 L.Ed. 386.

9. U.S.—Janoske v. Porter, C.C.A. Ill., 64 F.2d 958.

Where the state practice is uncertain, the adoption of a rule more effectually securing the purpose of the state laws on the subject is valid.—Lowry v. Story, C.C.N.C., 31 F. 769.

10. U.S.—Steam Stone-Cutter Co. v. Jones, C.C.Vt., 13 F. 567, 21 Blatchf. 138—Teese v. Phelps. C.C. Cal., 23 F.Cas.No.13,818, McAll. 17.
25 C.J. p 827 note 19.

Equity and admiralty practice were excluded from the operation of the Conformity Act, but were subject to the rule that the practice in such suits, except as otherwise provided by statute, or by rule of court, must be according to the principles, rules, and usages which belong to courts of equity and of admiralty, respectively. —Gaines v. Relf, La., 15 Pet. 9, 10 L.Ed. 642—21 C.J. p 356 note 46.

Subsequent changes in state practice

(1) The mere adoption of the state practice with respect to any matter does not require that subsequent changes in the state practice be followed.—Boston & M. R. R. Co. v. Gokey, Vt., 28 S.Ct. 657, 210 U.S. 155, 52 L.Ed. 1002, affirming 149 F. 42, 79 C.C.A. 64—In re Craig, C.C.N.J., 6 F. Cas.No.3,325, Pet.C.C. 1.

(2) But, although a statute allowing district courts to adopt by general rules such state laws as may be in force in relation to remedies on judgments presupposes some action by court, the use of the phrase "by general rules" indicates that court may incorporate whole procedure in bulk; hence a rule adopting such proceedings supplementary to execution "as are now or may be hereafter provided" by the state laws was valid and warrants resort to subsequent provisions of the state law relating to supplementary proceedings.—Capital Co. v. Fox, C.C.A. N.Y., 85 F.2d 97, 106 A.L.R. 376, affirming, D.C., 15 F.Supp. 677.

11. U.S.—Eley v. Gamble, C.C.A.Va., 75 F.2d 171.

On the abolition of the circuit courts and the transfer of their jurisdiction to the district courts, see infra § 308, all rules previously in force in the circuit courts were necessarily abrogated.[12]

§ 308. Jurisdiction

District courts have only such jurisdiction as congress confers; and congress may change or take away any jurisdiction it has conferred, making such change operative even as to pending cases. The district court has general equity jurisdiction.

The district courts are the creatures of statutes enacted in pursuance of the constitution, and, apart from the powers inherent in a lawfully constituted judicial tribunal, such courts have no jurisdiction other than that conferred on them by acts of congress within the limits defined by the Constitution.[13]

25 C.J. p 975 note 5.

No prescriptive or common law powers are inherent in the district court.—Concord Casualty & Surety Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.N.Y., 69 F.2d 78, 91 A.L.R. 885.

Manner of exercise

Where statutes, in conferring jurisdiction, point out the manner in which it shall be exercised, only that method expressly or impliedly conferred may be followed.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Mich., 107 F.2d 311, certiorari denied 60 S. Ct. 978, 310 U.S. 630, 84 L.Ed. 1400.

Effect of power to issue writs

The statute making available to district courts all writs not specifically provided for by statute, which may be necessary for exercise of jurisdiction of such courts, does not confer or expand jurisdiction.—Shimola v. Local Board No. 42 for Cuyahoga County, D.C.Ohio, 40 F.Supp. 808.

Power to make rates

The Federal district courts are without jurisdiction to exercise the ordinary rate-making power which the legislatures of various states have conferred on rate-making bodies, because power to prescribe rates is a function reserved to the states and because it is not within the judicial power conferred on district courts by the Constitution; hence, while the district court had jurisdiction to determine amount due on certificates of indebtedness issued by municipally owned water system and to compel adoption of schedule of rates sufficient to enable discharge of certificates within a reasonable time, it had no power itself to increase the rates to be charged by its receiver in operation of such water system.—Connett v. City of Jerseyville, C.C.A.Ill., 110 F.2d 1015.

Jurisdiction or power as to particular matters

(1) The federal district court has no power to reserve or report questions to the higher court for decision, but must pass on all issues involved, so that an appeal may be taken to the higher court.—Colyer v. Skeffington, D.C.Mass., 265 F. 17, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., Skeffington v. Katzeff, 277 F. 129.

(2) The district court has no power to appoint an ancillary guardian of an incompetent's property.—Southern Ohio Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, D.C.N.Y., 27 F.Supp. 485.

(3) In a suit by a trustee in bankruptcy to set aside an alleged preferential mortgage and remove clouds from the bankrupts' title created by a will containing interlineations and erasures, the United States district court has no probate jurisdiction and may construe the will, but cannot determine its contents.—City Nat. Bank v. Slocum, C.C.A.Ohio, 272 F. 11, certiorari denied Slocum v. Halliday, 42 S.Ct. 49, 257 U.S. 637, 66 L.Ed. 409.

(4) The federal district court has no power to validate bridge bonds issued under state laws.—Farmers' State Bank of New Washington, Ohio v. Board of Com'rs of Jensen Bridge Dist., D.C.Fla., 295 F. 755.

(5) United States district court cannot acquire and own property in its own right.—In re King, D.C.Tenn., 11 F.Supp. 351.

(6) District court has jurisdiction of subject matter of action by United States against motor bus operators to restrain defendants from carrying on their business until compliance with motor bus industry code promulgated under National Industrial Recovery Act.—U. S. v. Scott, D.C. Wash., 10 F.Supp. 453.

(7) A district court will not grant an injunction restraining the federal trade commission from examining the books and records of a person charged with using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as authorized by Federal Trade Commission Act Sept. 26, 1914 § 9, Comp.St. § 8836i, in view of the fact that by § 5, section 8836e, of the act the circuit court of appeals is given exclusive jurisdiction to review proceedings of the commission. —T. C. Hurst & Son v. Federal Trade Commission, D.C.Va., 268 F. 874.

(8) The district court has jurisdiction of an action to enjoin interference with fishing rights under a treaty with Indians.—McCauley v. Makah Indian Tribe, C.C.A.Wash., 128 F.2d 867, reversing, D.C., Makah Indian Tribe v. McCauley, 39 F.Supp. 75.

(9) District courts of the United States have jurisdiction of many cases of libel which are not cases cognizable in admiralty.—The Dixie, D. C.Tex., 30 F.Supp. 215.

(10) The district court, sitting at common law, had no jurisdiction of administratrix' action at law for United States customs inspector's death resulting from injuries received in boarding a vessel owned by the United States maritime commission and operated for the commission by private corporation, none of whose stock was owned directly or indirectly by the United States,

A fortiori, they do not have any jurisdiction which congress has specifically denied them.[14] The general rule, stated supra § 4 that the jurisdiction of federal courts other than the supreme court may be changed or taken away at the pleasure of congress, applies to district courts,[15] and, if jurisdiction as to any matter is withdrawn without a saving clause, all pending cases, although cognizable under the withdrawn jurisdiction when commenced, must fall.[16] In the sense that its jurisdiction is dependent on the will of congress, the district court is a court of limited, rather than general, jurisdiction,[17] but within the bounds of the jurisdiction conferred it exercises general,[18] exclusive, and concurrent[19] jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of the district court is, except as statutes may otherwise provide, strictly original;[20] the court has no power to review the decision of a state court.[21]

In appropriate places elsewhere in this title will be found discussions of the jurisdiction of district courts as respects particular actions, as, for example, cases affecting ambassadors, ministers, and consuls, see supra § 44, suits by the United States, see supra § 45, actions by states, see supra § 48, and suits between citizens of a state and foreign states, see supra § 54. Patent infringement

District court has no jurisdiction over patent infringement suit involving articles manufactured for United States.—Pierce v. Submarine Signal Co., D.C.Mass., 25 F.Supp. 862.

Controversies respecting public utility rates

Under the provision denying the district court jurisdiction of certain intra-state public utility rate cases where federal jurisdiction is based solely on diversity of citizenship or repugnance of an order to the Constitution, the court lacks jurisdiction not only where either of two grounds is present but even where both are present; the only situation in which the district court has jurisdiction of such cases is where the rate has been fixed without "reasonable notice and hearing" in the sense of denial of due process, and, if the court determines that there was such notice and hearing, it cannot proceed further to review errors of fact or law by the rate-making body.—Mississippi Power & Light Co. v. City of Jackson, Miss., D.C.Miss., 9 F.Supp. 564.

Customs duties

(1) The district court ordinarily has no jurisdiction of a bill to enjoin the liquidation of entry of customs duties.—Cottman Co. v. Dailey, D.C. Md., 20 F.Supp. 142, affirmed, C.C.A., 94 F.2d 85.

Conferring jurisdiction on other court

Statute restricting patent infringement suits involving apparatus manufactured for or sold to United States to court of claims is not unconstitutional as taking property either without due process of law or without adequate compensation.—Pierce v. Submarine Signal Co., D. C.Mass., 25 F.Supp. 862.

Circuit courts

(1) Before the abolition of the circuit courts by the judicial code of 1911, the jurisdiction of the district courts was much more limited than it is at present, and it was the circuit court that had jurisdiction of the great mass of litigation in cases of a civil nature between private parties.—Day v. The amount in controversy, as affecting the jurisdiction of the district court, is considered generally infra § 310.

Equity jurisdiction. The district court has, in all cases otherwise within the jurisdiction of the federal courts, general equity jurisdiction[22] as broad as the equity jurisdiction of the state courts.[23]

Actions to which state is a party. Although, as appears supra § 194, the supreme court has exclusive jurisdiction of all civil controversies wherein a state is a party, except between a state and its citizens, or between a state and citizens of other states, or aliens, nevertheless, in a suit to enforce alleged treaty rights against a state's tenants, the district court has jurisdiction, even though the state is a party, where no affirmative relief against the state is sought.[24]

§ 309. —— Claims against United States

By express statutory provision, the district court has jurisdiction of claims against the United States not exceeding ten thousand dollars founded on the Constitution of the United States or any law of congress, or on any regulation of an executive department, or on any contract with the United States government, or for damages in cases not sounding in tort, subject to certain specified exceptions. Jurisdiction as to other classes of claims against the United States is in some instances conferred on the district court by special statute, and as to particular claims by private statute.

Under the express provisions of a federal statute, commonly called the Tucker Act,[25] the district court has jurisdiction concurrent with the court of claims, see infra § 355, of claims against the United States[26] for money only[27] not exceeding ten thousand dollars[28] where such claim is founded on the

Construction of statute
While the statute is remedial and should not be looked on adversely, nevertheless the question of the court's jurisdiction must always be viewed in light of premise that suit will not lie against United States unless clearly authorized by statute. —Baltimore Mail S. S. Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Md., 76 F.2d 582, reversing, D. C., 7 F.Supp. 651, certiorari denied 56 S.Ct. 111, 296 U.S. 595, 80 L.Ed. 421.

Ultimate source of authority
The concurrent authority to entertain suits against the United States, which the Tucker Act vests in district courts, does not derive from the judicial article of the constitution.—Byron Jackson Co. v. U. S., D.C.Cal., 35 F.Supp. 665.

Refund of excess postage
The district court had jurisdiction of action against the United States to recover a refund for excess postage which plaintiffs were required to pay for mailing of certain items as first-class mail, instead of at third-class rate which plaintiffs were thereafter permitted to use.—Schreiber v. Strict compliance

The limitation of jurisdictional amount in the Tucker Act is a condition with which a complaining citizen must rigidly comply, and one on which the courts, of their own motion, must insist.—Hammond-Knowlton v. U. S., C.C.A.Conn., 121 F.2d 192.

Interest demanded in suit against United States must be considered as part of claim in determining whether suit was within district court's jurisdiction as involving claim "not exceeding" $10,000.—Otis Elevator Co. v. U. S., D.C.N.Y., 18 F.Supp. 87.

Although the actual value is greater than ten thousand dollars, where plaintiff prays only for that amount and thereby waives his right to recover more, the court has jurisdiction.—W. E. Hedger Co. v. U. S., D. C.N.Y., 42 F.2d 553, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 52 F.2d 31, certiorari denied 52 S.Ct. 130, 284 U.S. 676, 76 L.Ed. 571.

Private act

Where comptroller general, when acting with respect to a claim for loss sustained in fire originating from operation of railroads by United States in Minnesota on Oct. 12, 1918, relied solely on his own construction of Private Act respecting payment by government of claims for losses sustained in fire, review of comptroller general's construction of act was not confined to mandamus proceedings.—U. S. v. Bang, C.C.A. Minn., 117 F.2d 515, affirming, D.C., Bang v. U. S., 31 F.Supp. 535.

Recovery of immigration fine

An action for the return of a fine or a deposit for a fine improperly imposed under the immigration laws is within the jurisdiction of the district court as an action founded on a law of congress.—U. S. v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, C.C.A.N.Y., 26 F.2d 195, affirming, D.C., Compagnie General Transatlantique v. U. S., 21 F.2d 465—Clyde S. S. Co. v. U. S., D.C.N.Y., 33 F.2d 343.

Annuities

Provision of Retirement Act that employee shall be entitled to annuity payable from civil service retirement and disability fund is mandatory and is inseparable from correlative obligation of United States, and hence suit to recover annuity is on a claim "founded upon a law of Congress" and is within jurisdiction conferred on district courts, as are suits to recover sums of money which administrative officers are directed by act of congress to "pay" or "repay."—Dismuke v. U. S., Ga., 56 S.Ct. 400, 297 U.S. 167, 80 L.Ed. 561, affirming, C.C.A., U. S. v. Dismuke, 76 F.2d 715, rehearing denied 77 F.2d 1017, certiorari granted Dismuke v. U. S., 56 S. Ct. 111, 296 U.S. 554, 80 L.Ed. 391, rehearing denied 56 S.Ct. 594, 297 U. S. 728, 80 L.Ed. 1011.

Contractual obligation breached by tort

"Where the wrong [on which the claim is based] really derives from an undertaking, to stand on the undertaking and to disregard the tort is not to invoke a fictive agreement" and the court has jurisdiction.—Keifer & Keifer v. Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Neb., 59 S.Ct. 516, 521, 306 U.S. 381, 83 L.Ed. 784, reversing, C.C.A., 97 F.2d 812, affirming, D.C., 22 F.Supp. 918, certiorari granted 59 S.Ct. 106, 305 U.S. 588, 83 L.Ed. 372.

Contract must be implied in fact to give the court jurisdiction, a contract implied only in law or based merely on equitable considerations being insufficient.—U. S. v. Minnesota Mut. Inv. Co., Colo., 46 S.Ct. 501, 271 U.S. 212, 70 L.Ed. 911—Baltimore Mail S. S. Co. v. U. Suit in equity by surety

Agent of United States, being sued by subagent for expenses incurred by subagent in successfully defending suit by cargo owners for loss, could, before agent's liability to subagent was adjudicated, maintain suit in equity under Tucker Act against United States, under a bill sounding in contract and calling only for the payment of money.—Admiral Oriental Line v. U. S., C.C.A.N.Y., 86 F.2d 201.

Appropriation of property

Where the United States in taking possession of land in invitum for a public use, under authority of an act of congress, takes or destroys an easement over such land, appurtenant to lands not taken, there is an implied contract to pay for it, which will support an action in the district court.—Tucker v. U. S., D.C.R.I., 283 F. 428.

Fine in criminal case

There is no implied contract to repay a fine imposed in a criminal case under an unconstitutional statute and paid voluntarily, which gives the court jurisdiction of an action for its recovery.—Blumenthal v. U. S., D.C. Cal., 4 F.2d 808.

32. U.S.—Tempel v. U. S., Ill., 39 S. Ct. 56, 248 U.S. 121, 63 L.Ed. 162.

25 C.J. p 975 note 17, p 980 note 96.

"The words 'not sounding in tort' are in terms referable only to the fourth class of cases," that is, actions for damages, liquidated or unliquidated.—Ross Packing Co. v. U. S., D.C.Wash., 42 F.Supp. 932, 935.

Waiving tort and suing in assumpsit

The common-law fiction of waiving the tort and suing in assumpsit cannot be used as an evasion of the limited liability created by court of claims acts.—Keifer & Keifer v.

in the statute,[33] as, for example, the exception of cases brought to recover fees, salary, or compensation for official services of officers of the United States.[34] As will appear in the C.J.S. title Internal Revenue, the district court also has jurisdiction of any suit or proceeding to recover any sum, even if it exceeds ten thousand dollars, alleged to have been excessive or in any manner wrongfully collected under the internal revenue laws, if the collector who collected such sum is dead or out of office when the suit is begun.

The jurisdiction so conferred on the district court is restricted to the determination of issues between claimant and the government.[35] The statute refers only to original suits and does not permit the recovery of a demand against the United States by way of counterclaim,[36] but it permits the adjudication of a counterclaim against the government in a suit brought by it, for the purpose of setting off such claim against the government's claim.[37] The Tucker Act does not limit the jurisdiction of the district court to entertain a suit against governmental agencies and corporations;[38] and the fact that in such cases the claim involved exceeds that amount does not oust the district court's jurisdiction or require the claim to be prosecuted in the court of claims,[39]

Changing implied contract to tort

Where an implied promise on the part of the United States had arisen to pay a marble company for marble seized by United States, United States could not by a later claim convert the act of seizing the marble into a tort and thereby deprive marble company of a right to maintain an action against United States under the Tucker Act.—U. S. v. Georgia Marble Co., C.C.A.Ga., 106 F.2d 955.

Right determined under Private Act

Where Private Act respecting payment by government of claims for losses sustained in fire originating from operation of railroads by United States, and action of director general of railroads pursuant thereto had perfected plaintiff's right to receive money from United States for loss by personal injury in fire, and plaintiff had not received money, plaintiff could sue the United States by virtue of Tucker Act.—U. S. v. Bang, C.C.A.Minn., 117 F.2d 515, affirming, D.C., Bang v. U. S., 31 F. Supp. 535.

33. U.S.—U. S. v. McCrory, Ala., 119 F. 861, 56 C.C.A. 373.

Annuities or pensions

Annuities payable under Retirement Act are not "pensions" within the exceptions of the Tucker Act, and hence suits against government to recover annuities are within jurisdiction of district courts, if not precluded by administrative provisions of Retirement Act.—Dismuke v. U. S., Ga., 56 S.Ct. 400, 297 U.S. 167, 80 L.Ed. 561, affirming, C.C.A., U. S. v. Dismuke, 76 F.2d 715, rehearing denied 77 F.2d 1017, certiorari granted 56 S.Ct. 111, 296 U. S. 554, 80 L.Ed. 391, rehearing denied 56 S.Ct. 594, 297 U.S. 728, 80 L.Ed. 1011.

Claims dependent on treaty

Inasmuch as an action growing out of a treaty of the United States is excluded from the jurisdiction of the court of claims, it is by reference likewise excluded from the jurisdiction of the district, the latter's jurisdiction being only concurrent with that of the former.—George E. Warren Corporation v. U. S., C.C.A.N.Y., 94 F.2d 597, certiorari denied 58 S.Ct. 1041, 30 U.S. 572, 82 L.Ed. 1537.

Definition of officers

(1) "Officers," as used in this sense, includes officers named in the Constitution, those whose appointments are established by law, and those whose appointments have been vested by congress in the president, the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.—Brooks v. U. S., D. C.N.Y., 33 F.Supp. 68.

(2) The term "office" means a public station or employment conferred by the appointment of government, and embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emolument, and duties.—Baskins v. U. S., D.C.S.C., 32 F.Supp. 518.

Persons held to be officers

(1) A court reporter appointed by the court.—Oswald v. U. S., C.C.A. Hawaii, 96 F.2d 10.

Effect of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure

In action by the United States under the Miller Act, 40 U.S.C.A. § 270a et seq, for the use of subcontractor to recover on bond given by contractor to assure payment for labor and materials furnished to contractor while doing work under contract with the United States, district court's refusal to take jurisdiction of contractor's counterclaim against the United States for the balance allegedly due under the contract was not in violation of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure regarding the filing of counterclaims arising out of the same transaction as that on which complaint is based.—U. S., for Use of Mutual Metal Mfg. Co. v. Biggs, D. C.Ill., 46 F.Supp. 8.

particularly where the legislation creating the agency expressly provides that it may sue and be sued in any court of competent jurisdiction.[40] The limitations of the Tucker Act do not apply to a claim against the United States where the government has otherwise impliedly consented to be bound by an adverse decision by placing itself in the position of a private suitor.[41]

Apart from the provisions of the Tucker Act, jurisdiction of the district court as to particular classes of claims against the United States is in some cases governed by special statutes,[42] and, where this is so, the limitations of the Tucker Act do not apply.[43] Jurisdiction as to particular claims may also be conferred and regulated by private statute.[44]

The jurisdiction of the court of claims generally is considered infra §§ 328–340.

§ 310. —— Amount in Controversy

a. Requirement of jurisdictional amount
b. Amount required
c. What constitutes amount or value involved

a. Requirement of Jurisdictional Amount

By express statute, the jurisdiction of the district court in certain cases depends on there being involved in the controversy a stated minimum amount.

Eminent domain

Where government repudiated valid contract to purchase flowage easement and instituted proceeding to condemn easement in federal district court, the court did not have jurisdiction to entertain easement owner's demand that damages in condemnation proceeding be determined according to his contract with the government rather than by statutory mode, on ground that in instituting the proceedings the government entered court as a "private suitor."—Danforth v. U. S., supra.

42. U.S.—U. S. v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., C.C.A.S.C., 280 F. 349, reversed on other grounds Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. U. S., 43 S.Ct. 354, 261 U.S. 299, 67 L.Ed. 664.

Admiralty suits

Statute requiring certain suits against government to be brought in district court embraces suits on maritime causes of action by owners as well as by third persons injured by operation of merchant vessels for government.—Matson Nav. Co. v. U. S., 52 S.Ct. 162, 284 U.S. 352, 76 L. Ed. 336, affirming 72 Ct.Cl. 210, certiorari granted 52 S.Ct. 11, 284 U.S. 600, 76 L.Ed. 515.

Statute held not repealed

A statute giving the district courts jurisdiction over claims by owners of property requisitioned for war supplies or storehouses for the same was not impliedly repealed by another statute authorizing payment on approval by the secretary of war for property taken under agreements made before the Armistice, § 2 of which gave the court of claims jurisdiction to determine controversies regarding those claims.—Benedict v. U. S., D.C.N.Y., 271 F. 714.

43. U.S.—Cook v. U. S., C.C.A.Ala., 115 F.2d 463—Westbrook v. Director General of Railroads, D.C. Ga., 263 F. 211.

Patent infringement

Under special act permitting employee to sue United States for patent infringement, recovery was held not limited to ten thousand dollars prescribed by statute relating to suits against United States.—Van Meter v. U. S., C.C.A.N.Y., 47 F.2d 192, modifying, D.C., 37 F.2d 111.

Compensation for property requisitioned for war

(1) In a suit in a district court under a special statute to recover additional compensation for property requisitioned for war purposes, the court has jurisdiction, regardless of the amount involved, and plaintiff in such suit is entitled to trial by jury as in ordinary actions at law.—U. S. v. McGrane, C.C.A.N.J., 270 F. 761.

(2) But since the jurisdiction of the court under such statute is limited to controversies in which the compensation fixed is not satisfactory, recovery of a balance of nine thousand eight hundred fifty dollars and ninety-eight cents, owing for coal requisitioned under the act, must be had pursuant to the Tucker Act, the amount sued for in such case being liquidated.—Dexter & Carpenter v. U. S., D.C.Del., 275 F. 566.

Similar limitation in statute

District court, in suit to recover excess payments made by Fleet Corporation under canceled contract, was held without jurisdiction to determine claim of defendant by way of set-off to compensation in excess of amount allowed by shipping board, in view of special statute giving exclusive jurisdiction of such claims in excess of ten thousand dollars to the court of claims.—U. S. v. Skinner & Eddy Corporation, C.C.A.Wash., 35 F. 2d 889, modifying, D.C., 28 F.2d 373, and certiorari dismissed Skinner & Eddy Corporation v. U. S., 50 S.Ct. 248, 281 U.S. 770, 74 L.Ed. 1176.

44. U.S.—U. S. v. De Back, C.C.A. Cal., 118 F.2d 208, modifying, D.C., De Back v. U. S., 29 F.Supp. 141.

Permitting action for tort

A private act conferring jurisdiction on federal district court to hear, determine, and render judgment on claim for wrongful death as if United States were suable in tort was ineffective unless statutory right to recover existed.—U. S. v. Durrance, C.C.A.Fla., 101 F.2d 109.

Act construed

A private act, conferring jurisdiction on district court to render judgment "with costs under and in accordance with the same provisions of law as if the United States were a private party" on claims of named persons for damages to land resulting from construction of dikes and revetments, intended only to put United States in position of private party with respect to jurisdiction or costs, and did not intend that United States was to be treated as a private individual in regard to its liability for damages.—Kuhnert v. U. S., C.C.A.Mo., 127 F.2d 824, affirming, D.C., 36 F.Supp. 798.

presence of a minimum amount in controversy, unless the case falls within certain specified exceptions,[45] and in the discussions supra §§ 27–72 of jurisdiction as to particular types and classes of cases, there is a consideration of the necessity that a minimum amount in connection with the particular ground of jurisdiction be involved. The required jurisdictional amount must be present in suits in equity as well as in actions at law.[46] Under express provision of the statute, the jurisdictional limitation as to the amount in controversy does not apply to matters and proceedings in bankruptcy.[47]

Where a specific right of action is given by a statute which does not designate the particular court in which it may be brought and the action is actually brought in the district court, the general limitation as to amount or value applies.[48] Similarly, where a statute provides that an action thereunder may be brought in a court "of competent jurisdiction," the question of competency is determinable by reference to the general statutes concerning jurisdiction, so that the general limitation as to amount or value applies.[49]

The minimum amount regulating the jurisdiction of the district court with respect to claims against the United States is considered supra § 309, and the minimum amount regulating the jurisdiction of the Canal Zone district court, infra § 315.

b. Amount Required

In cases where the jurisdictional amount is required, the district court has jurisdiction only if the amount involved exceeds that amount, exclusive of interest and costs.

Under the current provisions of the judicial code, in cases where the jurisdictional amount is required, the district court has jurisdiction only if the amount involved exceeds three thousand dollars, exclusive of interest and costs.[50] If the amount involved is less than that[51] or only equal to it[52] the court lacks jurisdiction.

(3) Aggregation of amounts
(4) Particular proceedings

(1) In General

The amount or value in controversy is measured by the pecuniary consequence to either party which the judgment will directly produce either at once or in the future; collateral or speculative results of the judgment cannot be considered. Where the action involves something other or more than a mere sum of money, such other matter must be capable of pecuniary evaluation in order to be considered, although precise evaluation is not required.

The matter in controversy, the amount or value of which determines the jurisdiction of the district court, is the subject matter of the litigation,[53] as presented by the record for determination by the court;[54] it is the object sought to be gained in the litigation.[55] It is to be distinguished from the principle involved[56] and from matters out of which it arose.[57] The authorities have frequently asserted the rule that the amount or value involved in the controversy is measured by the pecuniary consequence to either party which the judgment will produce,[58] according to the judicial decisions on the

"It is the amount or value of that which the complainant claims to recover, or the sum or value of that which defendant will lose if the complainant succeeds in his suit, that constitutes the jurisdictional sum or value of the matter in dispute which tests the jurisdiction."—Miller v. First Service Corporation, C.C.A.N.D., 84 F.2d 680, 681, 109 A.L.R. 1179.

Intervener's demand
In determining whether sufficient amount is involved to entitle federal court to take jurisdiction, intervener must be considered the same as an original plaintiff.—Reppel v. Board of Liquidation, D.C.La., 11 F.Supp. 799.

In suit by obligor to cancel contract the sum contracted to be paid determines jurisdiction.—Massachu-subject, either at once or in the future.[59] Where the action is for a sum of money only, it is the sum involved in the controversy,[60] that is, the greatest sum for which judgment may be obtained[61] that determines jurisdiction. Where, however, the action involves something other or more than a mere sum of money, jurisdiction depends, as the case may be, on the value of the property in controversy,[62] or, more precisely, on the increase or diminution in the value of the property directly affected by the relief prayed,[63] or on the value of the right sought to be enforced or preserved, or the value of preventing the threatened wrong.[64]

Cancellation of fraudulent mortgage on estate property

In suit to compel accounting by guardian and to cancel mortgages, amount by which estate was depleted determines jurisdictional amount.—Schindler v. Spackman, C.C.A.S.D., 16 F.2d 45.

Value of release

In action for specific performance of contract to deliver general release to plaintiff against whom defendant had brought action for malicious prosecution and had demanded three hundred thirty thousand dollars in damages, the "amount in controversy" was three hundred thirty thousand dollars and hence the action involved the federal court jurisdictional sum.—Peavey v. Reed Co., D.C. N.Y., 41 F.Supp. 351.

Penalty not yet incurred

Where suit to enjoin enforcement of state copyright act was brought in federal court before act went into effect, no penalties could have been incurred under the act at the time of the institution of the suit, and hence penalties could not be included in determining whether jurisdictional amount of more than three thousand dollars, exclusive of interest and costs, was involved.—Buck v. Case, D.C.Wash., 24 F.Supp. 541, appeal dismissed in part Buck v. Gallagher, 59 S.Ct. 145, 305 U.S. 569, 83 L.Ed. 358, reversed on other grounds 59 S.Ct. 740, 307 U.S. 95, 83 L.Ed. 1128.

"Jurisdiction is based on actuality, not prophecy, the pressure of a grievance immediately felt and presently measurable in money of the jurisdictional amount. Speculative anticipation that conditions, from which present ills, not now sufficient in amount to give jurisdiction, flow, may in time aggregate the necessary amount, will not support

dictional amount is required, the matter in controversy, if it is not solely a sum of money, must be such that it is capable of being valued in money, in order to come within the grant of jurisdiction.[70] However, the fact that the value of the matter in controversy cannot be measured with exactness does not defeat the court's jurisdiction.[71] In the application of this rule it has been held that value may be predicated of political or social rights,[72] civil rights,[73] and of the right of a foreign corporation to engage in interstate commerce within a certain state,[74] but not of the matter in controversy in habeas corpus,[75] or in a suit by a stockholder to compel a corporation to permit an inspection of its books and records,[76] or in a suit for divorce,[77] even though alimony is claimed,[78] or in a suit to annul a divorce decree.[79]

(2) Interest, Costs, and Attorney's Fees

Interest and costs cannot be considered part of the amount in controversy, except where they are demanded as part and parcel of the original demand, and not merely as ancillary or incidental thereto. Attorney's fees may be included where they are claimed as part of the damages recoverable, but not where they are allowable as costs.

Under the express terms of the statute requiring the amount in controversy, exclusive of interest and costs, to exceed the stated amount, interest as such cannot be added to the principal sum demanded to make up the jurisdictional amount.[80] However, where an amount representing interest is not merely accessory or incidental to the principal demand, but is part and parcel of the obligation sought to be enforced in the federal court, or is claimed to be an element of the damages sought to be recovered, such amount may be considered as part of the amount in controversy.[81] Since costs are ordinarily merely incidental to a judicial proceeding and not jurisdiction."—Vicksburg, S. & P. Ry. Co. v. Nattin, C.C.A.La., 58 F.2d 979, 980, affirming, D.C., 51 F.2d 1061, motion denied 54 F.2d 712—Schlosser v. Welsh, D.C.S.D., 5 F.Supp. 993, 996.

Value of mining claims
Speculative value and fact that ore veins extend through premises may be considered in determining value of mining claims for jurisdictional purposes.—Kline v. Wright, D.C. Idaho, 42 F.2d 927.

Anticipated gains from fur trapping
In an action for breach of a contract employing plaintiff as agent on commission to engage trappers to trap furs on commission basis, plaintiff might well have established that his commissions on the furs that would have been obtained by the trapping operations had there been no breach would have exceeded the jurisdictional amount.—Prejean v. Delaware-Louisiana Fur-Trapping Co., C.C.A.La., 13 F.2d 71, reversing, D.C., 8 F.2d 357.

Future participation in pension fund
District court had jurisdiction of widow's suit in equity to preserve and protect right of future participation in widows' pension fund under certificate calling for monthly installments for life provided widow does not remarry, where, by actuarial determination of her life expectancy and likelihood of remarrying, value of widow's right to receive monthly payments as long as she remained unmarried exceeded the jurisdictional amount.—Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen v. Interest accruing before suit brought part of the recovery, they cannot be considered in determining the amount in controversy.[82] Where attorney's fees are claimed as part of the damages recoverable, such fees are properly considered in making up the jurisdictional amount;[83] but attorney's fees which are allowable only as costs are not to be taken into consideration.[84]

(3) Aggregation of Amounts

Interests of parties joined solely for convenience cannot be aggregated so as to confer jurisdiction, and ordinarily the court will have jurisdiction only as to those plaintiffs or defendants whose separate claims or the separate claims against whom are in themselves sufficient to confer jurisdiction; but where persons are united by a sufficient community of interest in the subject matter of the litigation, as in the case of a genuine representative or class action, the aggregate of their interests determines the court's jurisdiction. Assigned claims may be aggregated to confer jurisdiction, unless the assignments are only colorable and made solely for the purpose of collection.

It is well settled that the interests of parties joined solely for the purpose of convenience in a proceeding in the district court cannot be aggregated to confer jurisdiction.[85] Thus, where several plaintiffs assert distinct and separate demands in a single suit, the amounts thereof cannot be aggregated to make up the jurisdictional amount, and jurisdiction can be sustained only as to those claims which exceed such amount.[86] So too, where sep-

However, it has been held that interest, even if looked on as the measure of damages suffered by reason of nonpayment of money when due and, therefore, a penalty, is still "interest" in its very nature, and it cannot be included in the "matter in controversy," even though it is denominated a penalty and is imposed by statute.—Merrigan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., D.C.La., 43 F.Supp. 209.

Interest coupons, matured when the suit was begun, are separate enforceable obligations and may be included in the amount in controversy.—Brown-Crummer Inv. Co. of Wichita, Kan., v. City of Florala, Ala., D.C. Ala., 55 F.2d 238—Tyler County, Tex., v. Town, C.C.A.Tex., 23 F.2d 371, certiorari denied 49 S.Ct. 9, 278 U.S. 601, 73 L.Ed. 530—Hovenden v. City of Bristow, D.C.Okl., 34 F.Supp. 674—15 C.J. p 764 note 41 [f].

Penalty

A charge of twelve per cent on unpaid installments of special improvement bonds of a street improvement district constituted a "penalty" or a charge distinct from the obligation of the bonds, and could be considered in determining the jurisdictional amount.—Hovenden v. City of Bristow, supra.

Action on supersedeas bond

Where plaintiff had judgment in a state court action, and plaintiff appealed filing a supersedeas bond conditioned to pay the judgment with interest if affirmed, in an action on the bond after affirmance, interest was properly considered part of the amount in controversy.—Fitchner v. American Surety Co. of New York, D. C.Fla., 2 F.Supp. 321.

In an action sounding in tort, where part of the damages demanded is measured by the rate of interest on a sum of money, that part of the claim may be considered in making up the jurisdictional amount.—Chesbrough v. Northern Trust Co., Mich., 40 S.Ct. 237, 252 U.S. 83, 64 L.Ed. 470—Simecek v. U. S. National Bank of Omaha, C.C.A.Neb., 91 F.2d 214.

Protest fees, being taxable costs, cannot be considered part of the amount in controversy in an action on a promissory note.—Baker v. Howell, C.C.Neb., 44 F. 113.

Where costs in another action or proceeding are part of the principal demand involved in the action in the federal court, they are included.—Employers Mut. Liability Ins. Co. of Wisconsin v. Andrus, D.C.Ala., 39 F. Supp. 605—Fitchner v. American Surety Co. of New York, D.C.Fla., 2 F.Supp. 321—Glen Inv. Co. v. Romero, N.M., 254 F. 239, 165 C.C.A. 527.

Disbursements may be included if they are part of the matter put in controversy by the complaint, but not if they are to be recovered as part of statutory costs.—Cogswell v. Tribune Co., D.C.N.Y., 16 F.Supp. 631.

Limitations on amount

(1) The amount of attorney's fees that may be included cannot exceed the amount demanded therefor.—Mitchell v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, D.C.La., 31 F.Supp. 441.

(2) Only reasonable fees may be included.—Colorado Life Co. v. Steele, C.C.A.Ark., 95 F.2d 535—Merrigan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., D.C.La., 43 F.Supp. 209.

15 C.J. p 768 note 73.

The rules of joinder do not govern jurisdiction; hence, where no demand equals or exceeds the jurisdictional amount, the court acquires no jurisdiction by virtue of the fact that plaintiffs allege a community of interest as justification for joining in same complaint.—Dewar v. the amount of each separate claim, and not their aggregate amount.

On the other hand, where two or more plaintiffs unite to enforce a single title or right in which they have a common and undivided interest, the court has jurisdiction if their interests collectively equal the jurisdictional amount.[90] Similarly, where a single action is brought against several defendants who are jointly liable, the total liability is the amount in controversy.[91] So too, where the causes of action asserted against several defendants, which would otherwise be deemed distinct and separate, are tied together by allegations of conspiracy or fraudulent coöperation among the defendants, they may be aggregated for the purposes of jurisdiction,[92] and the same rule applies where the suit against the conspirators is brought by several rather than by only one of the alleged victims of the conspiracy or fraud.[93] Where a suit against several defendants involves a matter in which they all have a common interest, and the amount or value of the matter in controversy exceeds the jurisdictional amount, the jurisdiction of the court extends to defendants the value of whose separate interests is less than the jurisdictional amount.[94]

Where plaintiff has several demands against the same defendant which he may join in one action, the aggregate of such demands is the amount in controversy, regardless of the nature of the demands.[95]

Demands by separate taxing bodies
National bank seeking, in federal court, to enjoin collection of state, county, and municipal taxes could not join with county, as party defendant, municipality whose claim for taxes amounted to less than three thousand dollars to make up jurisdictional amount.—Albertville Nat. Coinsurers liable pro rata
Where several insurance companies issued identical policies insuring insured's merchandise against direct loss by fire, each policy containing a provision that it covered liability only in the proportion the amount insured should bear to whole insurance, the language of the policies established a community interest among the companies, which gave them a right to aggregate claims against them on policies for purpose of making the jurisdictional amount.—Jamerson v. Bank's liability for tax on stockholders

(1) Where bank was liable for and paid taxes imposed on bank stockholders, court had jurisdiction of tax refund suit involving jurisdictional amount, notwithstanding amount paid for no one stockholder would give court jurisdiction.—Crawford County Trust & Savings Bank v. Bank stockholders' liability

(1) Where the statutory liability of stockholders runs directly to the creditors as a body, and there is no duly constituted representative to act for them, in a suit brought by one creditor in behalf of himself and all others, to enforce such liability and distribute the fund to be thus created, if such fund equals or exceeds the jurisdictional minimum the court has jurisdiction thereof and of all the component parts thereof, and, hence, of all the stockholders regardless of the amount of their individual liability.—Brusselback v. Arnovitz, C.C.A.Ohio, 87 F.2d 761, certiorari granted Christopher v. Brusselback, 58 S.Ct. 16, 302 U.S. 672, 82 L.Ed. 518, reversed on other grounds 58 S.Ct. 350, 302 U.S. 500, 82 L.Ed. 388—Brusselback v. Conway, Ky., 188 F. 579, 110 C.C.A. 377—Alsop v. Conway, C.C.A.Ky., 188 F. 568.

(2) But in a suit by the superintendent of banks against numerous bank stockholders to enforce statutory liability, the test of federal jurisdiction as to each stockholder severally liable is the amount of the separate claim against him, not the aggregate amount.—Broderick v. American General Corporation, C.C.A. Md., 71 F.2d 864, 94 A.L.R. 1359.

(3) And the latter rule has been applied likewise in a suit brought by one creditor for himself and all others where the liability of the stockholders was several and each creditor had a direct remedy against each stockholder for its recovery.—Auer v. Lombard, Mass., 72 F. 209, 19 C.C.A. 72.

(4) However, on the latter point there is authority to the contrary, at least where the suit is brought in equity to avoid multiplicity of actions.—U. S. v. Freeman, D.C.Mass., 21 F.Supp. 593—Reconstruction Finance Corporation v. Central Republic Trust Co., D.C.Ill., 11 F.Supp. 976.

(5) But where an action in assumpsit is brought, the several liabilities of different stockholders cannot be aggregated.—Burnett v. Bush, D.C.N.J., 44 F.Supp. 390.

Foreclosure of assessments

Action by holders of six paving assessment bonds of five hundred dollars each issued by municipality to foreclose delinquent assessments presented "amount in controversy" sufficient to give federal district court jurisdiction, in view of state statute which compels all assessments to be foreclosed in one "class action."—City of Hollis, Okl., ex rel. found only in the spurious sense that a common question of fact and law are involved,[98] the suit can be maintained only by one whose individual interest exceeds the jurisdictional amount, and neither the aggregate of the several claims nor the size of the fund out of which payment is sought controls. Where, in a suit on behalf of claimants and all others similarly situated, the interest of any one complainant is sufficient to confer jurisdiction, other persons whose interests are insufficient may join, and the relief granted will inure to the benefit of all.[99]

An assignee or transferee of several claims, each of which is less than the required jurisdictional amount, may aggregate the several claims to make up the amount necessary for jurisdiction,[1] since the prohibition in the Judiciary Act against the bringing of actions by assignees does not refer to jurisdictional amount but rather to diversity of citizenship,[2] provided the assignments or transfers are not colorable and made solely for the purpose of collection;[3] but this proviso does not prevent an

Derivative cause of action

The fact that bondholder with bonds in excess of three thousand dollars was joined as plaintiff in suit by corporation and associated companies against other bondholders to enjoin actions on matured bonds would not support federal court's jurisdiction in view of purpose of suit to avoid disturbance of pending reorganization plan, since primary right threatened was that of corporation, and the derivative right is worth no more than the primary one.—Central Mexico Light & Power Co. v. Transfer in trust

Agreement for transfer of bonds to bondholders' committee under which title was to pass to committee in trust to conserve, salvage, and adjust investment gave federal court jurisdiction of action by committee, notwithstanding some of transferors could not have sued in federal court because of insufficiency of amount of their claims.—Bullard v. Assignment to one having sufficient claim

A claimant owning separate claim of less than three thousand dollars cannot circumvent the jurisdictional limitation of federal district court by a colorable and fictitious instrument of assignment to a plaintiff assignee from suing on claims assigned to him for collection only where the amounts of the individual claims are such as would have enabled the real owners to sue thereon.[4]

(a) Injunction Suits Generally

In injunction suits the amount in controversy is the value to plaintiff of the right or interest he seeks to protect, or, as some cases have held, the value to defendant of the acts sought to be restrained. It is not the mere pecuniary loss or damage resulting from the acts complained of.

In a suit for an injunction, the value of the matter in dispute is that of the object of the bill,[5] that is, the value to plaintiff of the right or interest for which he prays protection,[6] or the amount by which the value of such right or of plaintiff's property will be diminished as a result of the acts sought to be enjoined;[7] and in some cases the test applied has been the value to defendant of the acts which plaintiff seeks to restrain or prevent.[8] The pecuniary loss or damage resulting from the acts complained of is not the amount in controversy.[9] Indeed it has even been held that past losses from the acts sought to be enjoined cannot be added to the value of the right invaded in order to bring the amount in controversy up to the jurisdictional amount,[10] although such losses may sometimes be used as a measure of the value of the right involved;[11] but where the action is for damages and for injunction the amount of damages claimed in good faith may be added to the value of the right involved in determining the amount or value in controversy.[12]

In accordance with the foregoing rules, in a suit to enjoin the enforcement of a statute or regulation which, without reference to a tax, destroys or restricts the right to do business, the right of plaintiff to do business, or to do business free from the threatened interference is the matter in controversy.[13] The right to do business free from the interference of the challenged statute or regulation is not measured by the investment in or the net worth of the business or by the volume of business transacted within a given period,[14] but it may be measured by the loss that would follow enforcement of the statute or regulation, as, for example, by the diminution of net profits or the cost of compliance.[15] In a suit to enjoin a continuing wrong to

15 C.J. p 753 note 40.

Decrease in sales

The amount in controversy in suit to restrain defendants from picketing plaintiff's stores could not be determined merely by value of decrease in volume of merchandise sold by it, since loss would depend on profit it might reasonably have anticipated from sale of merchandise represented by decrease in volume.—S. S. Kresge Co. v. Amsler, C.C.A.Mo., 99 F.2d 503, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 582, 306 U.S. 641, 83 L.Ed. 1041.

Impaired use and enjoyment

As respects jurisdiction of federal court in action to enjoin trespass, the result of which would be to destroy or impair the use and enjoyment of plaintiff's land as a whole, the "amount in controversy" is determined by the value of the land.—Colony Coal & Coke Corporation v. Napier, D.C.Ky., 28 F.Supp. 76.

Loss of prospective compensation

In taxpayer's suit against lieutenant governor and state auditor to enjoin auditor from drawing further warrants payable to lieutenant governor for services allegedly being performed without right, where latter would be deprived of compensation at rate of six thousand dollars per year for over two years if plaintiff should be successful and had already received over three thousand dollars, suit held to involve necessary amount in controversy as to each party, regardless of amount of taxes paid by plaintiff.—Armstrong v. Capitalization of cost of compliance

(1) Where compliance involves a permanent annual outlay, such annual outlay may be capitalized for the purpose of determining the amount in controversy.—Western & A. R. R. v. Railroad Commission of Georgia, Ga., 43 S.Ct. 252, 261 U.S. 264, 67 L. Ed. 645, reversing, D.C., 275 F. 128.

(2) On the other hand, where the cost of compliance involves no permanency of annual outlay, but merely the expenses for a specific period, as, for example, one year, such expenses cannot be capitalized.—Kroger Grocery & Baking Co. v. Lutz, Ind., 57 S.Ct. 215, 299 U.S. 300, 81 L.Ed. 251—Dunning v. Agricultural Prorate Advisory Commission of California, D.C.Cal., 38 F.Supp. 393.

Portion of good will threatened

Where Ohio oil company making no sales in Connecticut except oil to industrial concerns sought relief from alleged unfair competition by Connecticut corporation making gasoline sales from single filling station to residents of Hartford, Conn., "amount in controversy" for purposes of federal jurisdiction was not to be measured by total value wherever found of right for which protection was sought by oil company but by value of portion thereof that was threatened by Connecticut corporation's act.—Pure Oil Co. v. Puritan Oil Co., D.C.Conn., 39 F.Supp. 68.

Tax to pay bonds

(1) In suits to enjoin the collection of taxes levied to pay bonds, the amount in controversy is not the amount of the bonds but the amount of taxes levied.—Vicksburg, S. & P. Ry. Co. v. Nattin, C.C.A.La., 58 F.2d 979, affirming, D.C., 51 F.2d 1061, motion denied 54 F.2d 712.

(2) The same is true in a suit to enjoin the sale of bonds or incurring of other obligations for which taxes are to be levied.—Colvin v. City of Jacksonville, Fla., 15 S.Ct. 866, 158 U.S. 456, 39 L.Ed. 1053—Elliott v. Board of Trustees of Ovalo Rural High School Dist. No. 19, C.C. A.Tex., 53 F.2d 845—Pine v. East failure to pay will subject plaintiff to a penalty,[18] or will result in the suppression, restriction, or impairment of his business,[19] or that property of a greater value than the jurisdictional amount will be subjected to a lien and a cloud cast on the title,[20] cannot be considered before such consequences have been incurred, since in either case the penalty or loss may be avoided by payment of the tax; but where the penalty has already been incurred and its enforcement is threatened,[21] or where plaintiff's failure to pay has already subjected his business to the suppression, restriction, or impairment consequent on nonpayment,[22] such penalties or threatened losses may be considered. Except in so far as they are likely to be demanded within the time reasonably required to conclude the litigation, taxes which may be demanded in the future, or are undetermined, unaccrued, or unspecified, cannot be taken into consideration.[23] Accordingly the fact that the tax is payable annually does not permit its value to be capitalized where no tax for future years is as yet payable, and its imposition in future years is conjectural.[24] While the taxpayer's inability to litigate the validity of the tax without risk of irreparable injury to his business is a ground for invoking the equity powers of a federal court, it affords

Tax imposed on third person

(1) Where the tax is imposed on third persons with whom plaintiff has contractual relations, and whose failure to pay the tax will result in their being prohibited from continuing such relations, the impairment of plaintiff's business measures the amount in controversy.—Pavel v. Richard, D.C.La., 28 F.Supp. 992.

(2) Similarly, where the consequence of a third person's failure to pay a license fee imposed upon him is to prohibit plaintiff from dealing with him, the amount in controversy is the value of plaintiff's right to do business free from such restraint, and not merely the amount of the tax imposed.—Dugan v. (3) So the amount in controversy in suit by radio broadcasting station to enjoin collection of tax on receiving sets was held to be the amount of the threatened wrong to plaintiff's business.—Station WBT v. Poulnot, D.C.S.C., 46 F.2d 671.

no measure of the amount in controversy.[25] An exception to the rule that the amount of the disputed tax is the amount in controversy has been recognized in cases where the threatened tax would constitute an impairment of the obligation of a contract exempting plaintiff from taxation, in which case the test is the value of such contract right.[26]

(c) Insurance, Pensions, Workmen's Compensation, Etc.

Where a suit involving an insurance policy raises an issue as to its validity, the amount in controversy is the value of the policy, which may be the face amount as in the case of a life policy with a fixed liability, or the estimated value where the amount of liability varies with certain contingencies; but, where a suit is brought merely to recover accrued liability and no justiciable issue is raised as to the future liability of the insured, only the amount claimed is in controversy. Similar principles apply in cases involving pensions, workmen's compensation, etc.

In any suit involving the validity of an insurance policy, as, for example, in a suit by an insurer to cancel a life, health, or accident policy or to declare its invalidity, or in a suit by insured to enjoin its cancellation or to reinstate one that has been canceled or for a judgment declaring its validity, the amount in controversy is the value of the policy, measured by the amount of the probable obligations of insurer thereunder, even though the exact amount of such obligations may vary with certain contingencies.[27] So, the amount payable in case of death of insured,[28] as well as disability benefits for which insurer may become liable,[29] and the future premiums, payment of which is required to be waived during periods of disability,[30] are part thereof. Where the suit involves a life policy which definitely fixes the amount of liability, the face amount of the policy is involved in the controversy.[31] It has even been held that the face amount of the policy is in controversy where the amount which insurer may become obligated to pay varies with certain contingencies, as in the case of a policy containing special provisions relating to double indemnity, accidental death, or disability payments;[32] but the greater weight of authority holds that in the latter situation the test is not the maximum contingent liability,[33] although that, as well as the min-

Death of insured pending suit

An action to cancel a life and health policy was not dismissible after insured's death pending suit on ground that total amount recoverable under policy was less than three thousand dollars where the validity of a contract for five thousand dollars of accident insurance as well as health and disability benefits was involved, since the value of an insurance policy which itself is in controversy determines the question of jurisdictional amount.—Mutual Ben. Nonliability in certain contingencies does not necessarily show absence of jurisdictional amount, and basically this rule is no different from the rule in cases of life insurance policies where the amount is fixed, for even in the latter type of cases, although death is inevitable, there are still contingencies which would absolve insurer from liability, as for example, failure to pay premiums.—Penn Mut. imum amount, is a factor to be considered in determining the probable amount of liability,[34] as is the life expectancy of insured.[35] It has also been held that the reserve which insurer must set up to cover the contingent liabilities may be considered as part of the amount in controversy,[36] although this has been held not to be the proper test.[37] Of course, amounts claimed to have accrued by reason of past disabilities may be added in determining the amount in controversy[38] as well as the amount of premiums paid to insurer,[39] and the amount of benefits already paid to insured and sought to be recovered.[40]

On the same principles as those involved in insurance cases it has been held that in a suit directly involving the future rights of a widow under a pension certificate[41] or under a workmen's compensation statute,[42] the maximum, or at least probable, amount of future payments is part of the amount in controversy, despite the fact that marriage or death would end the right to payments thereafter.

Where a suit is brought to recover benefits claimed already to have accrued,[43] plus the statutory penalty for insurer's refusal to pay on demand,[44] or, whether separately or in connection with a demand for payment of benefits by insurer, for the amount of premiums paid after the alleged disability,[45] but presents no justiciable claim directly affecting the future rights of insured or obligations of insurer under the policy, the total of the amounts so claimed is the amount in controversy and the amount for which insurer may become liable cannot be included, even though the judgment sought would operate as an estoppel or be res judicata against insurer in a subsequent action,[46] and, a fortiori, where it would not op-

Unexercised option to increase

In a suit to cancel a life insurance policy, the face amount of which was less than the jurisdictional amount, the amount in controversy was not increased by the fact that the policy gave insured an option to increase the amount of the policy.—Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn., v. Rabinowitz, D.C.Md., 9 F.Supp. 353.

Effect of answer alleging lapse of policy

In action solely to recover seven hundred fifty dollars as monthly disability payments allegedly due under two thousand five hundred dollars life policy covering permanent total disability, jurisdictional amount could not be attained by adding face of policy to such payments, even though answer alleged lapse of policy for nonpayment of premiums prior to disability.—Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. v. Wilson, C.C.A.Cal., 81 F.2d 657.

Admission of partial liability

The claim of one suing for five thousand dollars payable under life insurance policy issued by foreign corporation was for amount within federal court's jurisdiction, even if defendant's offer to pay three thousand dollars in full settlement of claim was equivalent to acknowledgment of unconditional liability to such extent.—Morrow v. Mutual Casualty Co. of Chicago, D.C.Ky., 20 F. Supp. 193.

Action to reform and enforce

In an action to reform a fire policy, and to enforce it as reformed, where the policy was for ten thousand dollars and twenty thousand dollars and the alleged fire loss of insured's customers was over six thousand dollars, the entire amount of the loss was involved.—Morris v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, Pa., C.C.A.Cal., 130 F.2d 553.

erate as an estoppel or be res judicata.[47] In such case the amount in controversy is not increased by the amount of reserve required to be maintained against the policy,[48] although there is authority to the contrary,[49] by that portion of the annual premium covering the period between the death of insured and the end of the premium year,[50] or by a prayer for a declaration that penalties shall attach to future delays in payment[51] or that annual premiums in the future need not be paid as long as total and permanent disability continues.[52] The same rules have been applied in a suit brought by insurer for a declaratory judgment as to its liability for past disability benefits, where there is no justiciable issue as to the validity of the policy or as to insurer's liability for future payments.[53] In such case, the life expectancy of insured is no factor.[54]

Indemnity insurance. In a suit by an indemnity insurer against insured for a declaratory judgment as to insurer's duty and obligations with respect to an alleged cause of action by a third person against insured, the full amount of possible liability under the policy,[55] plus the expense of defending the third person's action,[56] comprises the amount in controversy.

Interpleader. Under the statutory provision giving district courts jurisdiction of bills of interpleader or suits in the nature of interpleader where two or more adverse claimants, citizens of different states, are claiming to be entitled to an insurance policy of the value or amount of five hundred dollars or more, or to the benefits arising by virtue of such policy, or to property or money of the value of five hundred dollars in the custody or possession of the company, the court has jurisdiction of such a suit where the amount for which insurer is liable equals or exceeds five hundred dollars,[57] even though the face amount of the policy is less,[58] or where several policies, each for less than five hundred dollars, have an aggregate face value exceeding that sum.[59]

(d) Actions Involving Title and Possession; Liens

In ejectment the amount in controversy is the value of the interest in the land to recover which the suit was brought, and in an action to quiet title or to remove a cloud, it is the value of as much of plaintiffs' property as is affected by the adverse claim. In a suit to foreclose a lien the amount in controversy is the amount sought to be recovered through the lien.

In ejectment the value of the matter in dispute is that of the interest in the land, to recover which the suit was brought, although defendant claims a lesser interest therein,[60] together with any special damages that are alleged and can be recovered in the suit.[61]

In a suit to quiet title or to remove a cloud therefrom, the value of the matter in controversy is that of as much of plaintiff's property as is affected by the adverse claim,[62] or, as otherwise stated, the difference between the value of the property without the cloud and the value with the cloud on it.[63] Where the alleged cloud on the title consists of tax liens, the amount in controversy has been held to be the amount of the tax and not the value of the property subject to the lien,[64] but it has also been held that the value of the property governs.[65]

In a suit to foreclose a mortgage or other lien, the amount in dispute, for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction, is the amount sought to be recovered through the lien,[66] together with any damages not covered by the lien, for which judgment is prayed;[67] but it has also been held that in such an action the amount demanded and the value of the property on which the lien is asserted must each exceed the jurisdictional amount.[68]

Actions for the mere possession of realty involve only the value of the possession.[69]

Possession of personal property. In an action or proceeding to recover the possession of personal property, it seems that the value of the property sought by plaintiff or by claimant of the same, is that of the matter in dispute.[70]

In a creditor's or stockholder's suit for the adminis-

Amount of mortgage

Jurisdiction of federal court in action in ejectment to try title to realty was unaffected by amount of outstanding mortgage or deed of trust. —Peterson v. Sucro, C.C.A.N.C., 93 F.2d 878, 114 A.L.R. 890.

Suit to establish trust

In action against surviving widow of deceased guardian to establish trust in favor of infants in realty purchased by the guardian with infants' money, the "matter in controversy" for purpose of establishing federal court jurisdiction was the realty purchased by guardian and not amount of infants' money received by him.—Catanzaritti v. Bianco, D.C. Pa., 30 F.Supp. 873.

Several defendants

Where several defendants in action in ejectment to try title to realty were in privity, claiming under a common source of title, and making a common defense, with result that plaintiff's claim was disputed by all defendants as to entire property in controversy, value of entire property, and not value of respective defendants' interests, constituted "amount in controversy."—Peterson v. Sucro, C.C.A.N.C., 93 F.2d 878, 114 A.L.R. 890.

15 C.J. p 762 note 5.

Quieting of title as collateral effect

A suit under Kentucky statute for injunction to prevent trespass on and to restrain assertion of claim against land, the nature and extent of which claim was undisclosed, was not a "suit to quiet title," except in a collateral or incidental aspect; hence the value of the land did not determine jurisdiction.—Colony Coal & Coke Corporation v. Napier, D.C.Ky., 28 F.Supp. 76.

How value determined

(1) In determining the value of land, the value in its actual situation and use is controlling, and not its simple value as land.—Griffith v. Enochs, D.C.La., 43 F.Supp. 352—New Jersey Federation of Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Ass'ns v. Hoffman, D.C.Pa., 25 F. Supp. 687.

(2) Thus, in an action involving title to land held under an oil lease and producing oil, the amount involved was not merely the superficial value of the land, but the court was required to consider the mineral value thereof, and could also capitalize the annual rental, in determining the amount involved.—Griffith v. Enochs, supra.

Adjudication of water priorities

In suits to quiet title and adjudicate water priorities, jurisdictional "matter in controversy" is not any separate, unidentified, undivided claim of one owner to segregate and use portion of waters, but is aggregate of uses.—Dern v. Tanner, D.C. Mont., 60 F.2d 626.

70. U.S.—Peyton v. Robertson, Va., 9 Wheat. 527, 6 L.Ed. 151.

Special damages

The amount involved is not enlarged by a claim of special damages for injury to plaintiff's business, when the state practice would not allow the recovery of the same.—Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co., S.C., 18 S.Ct. 645, 170 U.S. 468, 42 L.Ed. 1111, reversing, C.C., 80 F. 786.

tration of assets, if the real purpose of the suit is the enforcement of plaintiff's individual claim or interest, the amount thereof governs, but, if the suit is brought in the right of the corporation or all creditors and the real matter in controversy is the administration of assets, the amount of the assets controls.

Creditor's action. In a suit in the nature of a creditor's action asking for the distribution of assets or for the appointment of a receiver to conserve or distribute the assets, the amount in controversy is generally held to be the amount of plaintiff's claim, and not the amount of the assets.[71] However, in a number of cases, especially earlier ones, it has been held that, where the creditor sues on behalf of himself and the other creditors for the administration of the fund, the amount of the fund governs,[72] and a number of more recent cases have held that, where the real matter in controversy is the administration of defendant's assets and not merely the enforcement of a creditor's claim as a lien against the assets, the amount of the assets controls.[73] In a suit by a creditor to restrain a receiver of the debtor from paying out dividends on an alleged false claim, the amount in controversy is the amount of complainant's own claim, and not the amount of the dividends, payment of which is sought to be enjoined.[74]

Stockholder's action. Where a stockholder sues in the right of the corporation, the amount in controversy is the value of the right of the corporation which it is sought to protect and not the value of complainant's interest therein.[75] Thus it has been held that in a stockholder's suit for the appointment of a receiver for the purpose of winding up the affairs of the corporation, or of conserving or distributing its assets, the amount in controversy is the value of the entire corporate assets,[76] although in some cases jurisdiction has been determined by the value of complainant's stock.[77] On the other hand, where a stockholder's suit is in reality nothing more than an attempt to enforce or protect his own rights, the value of his stock, and not the value of the corporate assets, governs.[78]

In a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, the value of the property transferred has been held to be the amount in controversy;[79] but it has also been held that in a creditor's suit jurisdiction is determined by the amount claimed by the creditor rather than by the value of the property held by the debtor's alleged fraudulent assignee.[80] mencement of the suit, and subsequent events changing the amount can neither confer nor divest jurisdiction.

The amount involved must be determined with reference to the situation existing at the time of the commencement of the suit,[81] and subsequent events changing the amount can neither confer nor divest jurisdiction.[82] Thus it is usually held that, where an action is originally brought for an amount which is within the jurisdiction of the court, jurisdiction is not defeated by the fact that through subsequent events the amount involved is reduced to an extent which makes it less than the jurisdictional amount.[83]

(2) Effect of Pleadings

The amount demanded in good faith, or the alleged value of the property or right, is, in the first instance, regarded as the amount or value in controversy, even though there appears to be a valid defense to the action; but, if it appears that such demand was colorable, fictitious, or made in bad faith, the real amount involved governs. Subsequent pleadings cannot ordinarily divest the court's jurisdiction, although they may in some cases supply the jurisdictional amount otherwise lacking.

Primarily the amount in controversy must be determined from the initial pleading.[84] Unless the law gives a different rule[85] the specific amount demanded or claimed in good faith by plaintiff in an action on a money demand or sounding in damages,[86] or the alleged value of the property or right

Effect of past situation

Where plaintiff's property was assessed for six thousand fifty-two dollars and five cents, but at time of suit there was lien for only three hundred twenty dollars and eighty cents, federal court had no jurisdiction of suit to restrain collection of assessment.—Adam Schumann Associates v. City of New York, C.C.A.N.Y., 40 F.2d 216, certiorari denied 51 S.Ct. 20, 282 U.S. 838, 75 L.Ed. 745.

Intervention of another party

Right to intervene presupposes an action duly brought, so that, if jurisdiction is lacking at commencement of suit, because amount involved is insufficient, it cannot be aided by intervention of a creditor with a sufficient claim; hence the court is without power at a later time to cure such lack of jurisdiction by nunc pro tunc order directing intervention of creditor with claim exceeding jurisdictional amount, and such intervention cannot be regarded as an original proceeding for the purpose of sustaining jurisdiction from the date petition to intervene was granted.—Pianta v. H. M. Reich Co., C.C. A.N.Y., 77 F.2d 888.

15 C.J. p 775 note 23.

Death of joint claimant

Where husband and wife having joint claim for more than three thousand dollars properly joined in suing for son's death, amendment after wife's death, whereby husband sought only his half of compensation, less than three thousand dollars, did not deprive federal court of jurisdiction.—Ford, Bacon & Davis v. Volentine, C.C.A.Miss., 64 F.2d 800.

Before and after removal

Where jurisdictional requirements were satisfied when action on contract for purchase of standing timber was originally brought in state court, jurisdiction was not lost by the fact that after removal the amount sued for under liquidated damage clause of contract was less than the jurisdictional requirement.—Foster v. Hudson Valley Lumber Co., D.C.Md., 37 F.Supp. 381.

Co., Mich., 85 F. 4, 29 C.C.A. 438.

Limited liability provision

Where damages in common-law action, against express company for failure to deliver manuscript shipped by express, were limited by the receipt for shipment to fifty dollars, federal court could not entertain jurisdiction, although seven hundred fifty thousand dollars damages were sought.—Peyton v. Railway Express Agency, C.C.A.Tex., 124 F.2d 430, reversed on other grounds 62 S.Ct. 1171, 316 U.S. 350, 86 L.Ed. 1525.

Where the law liquidates the damages, the amount so liquidated, and not the amount claimed in the complaint, constitutes the matter in dispute.—Associated Press v. Emmett, D.C.Cal., 45 F.Supp. 907—Bergman v. Inman, Poulsen & Co., C.C.Or., 91 F. 293.

Mere claim for exemplary damages in action where exemplary damages are not recoverable cannot affect jurisdictional amount of federal court. —Greene v. Keithley, C.C.A.Neb., 86 F.2d 238—Newcastle Products v. School Dist. of Blair Tp., D.C.Pa., 18 F.Supp. 335.

Payment

(1) Where it appears, after the filing of a complaint demanding an amount sufficient to confer jurisdiction, that plaintiff had, in excusable ignorance and without bad faith, failed to credit defendant with payments reducing the claim below the jurisdictional amount, the court retains jurisdiction.—National Surety Corporation v. City of Excelsior Springs, Mo., ex rel. and to Use of Schwarzenbach, C.C.A.Mo., 123 F.2d 573.

(2) Where defendant sets up payments reducing the amount claimed below the jurisdictional amount, the court retains jurisdiction if, in order to determine the amount in controversy, it must consider conflicting testimony or disputed questions of law.—Stillwell-Bierce & Smith-Vaile Co. v. (1) In general.—Kriesak v. Crowe, D.C.Pa., 36 F.Supp. 127—Operators' Piano Co. v. First Wisconsin Trust Co., C.C.A.Ill., 283 F. 904.

(2) Where suits on two concurrent insurance policies were begun, and a compromise was agreed on but repudiated by insurer under one of the policies, the face amount of which was half of the face amount of the other, plaintiff's claim on the policy not compromised was not confined to half the amount for which the other policy was compromised.—Coffin v. The mere ad damnum clause will not confer jurisdiction where the claim is one which plaintiff cannot be legally permitted to sustain by evidence to the extent of the juris-in the record,[93] or from the failure to allege certain facts,[94] or from the proofs,[95] that there can be or could not have been a reasonable expectation of recovering a sufficient sum, and that the claim was, therefore, fictitious, colorable, made in bad faith, or excessive, the real amount involved governs and the court has no further jurisdiction. However, where the cause of action as stated involves an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, the fact that plaintiff is subsequently unable to recover an amount sufficient for jurisdiction, does not of itself show bad faith or oust jurisdiction.[96] dictional amount.—North America Transportation & Trading Co. v. Morrison, Wash., 20 S.Ct. 869, 178 U.S. 262, 44 L.Ed. 1061, reversing, C.C., 85 F. 802.

Credit ignored

(1) Where the answer discloses that plaintiff in demanding an amount in excess of the jurisdictional minimum has ignored an undisputed credit to which defendant is entitled, and which, if allowed, reduces the amount in controversy below the jurisdictional minimum, the court has no jurisdiction.—Bedford Quarries Co. v. Welch, C.C.Iowa, 100 F. 513.

Question of fact

Whether the claim is based on reasonable expectation of recovering the jurisdictional amount or is fraudulent, fictitious, colorable, or excessive is a question of fact.—Nixon v. Town Taxi, D.C.Mass., 39 F.2d 618.

Effect of conclusions of court respecting amount

Judgment could not rest on conclusion that action involved jurisdictional amount, where conclusion rested on findings affirmatively showing that judgment granting full relief prayed for amounted to less than jurisdictional amount, even when augmented by surplusage awarding relief not pleaded or prayed for.—Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. v. Wilson, C.C.A.Cal., 81 F.2d 657.

Proofs on former trial

Court is not without jurisdiction as matter of law where item of damage necessary to make jurisdictional amount was withdrawn from jury on former trial for want of evidence to sustain it.—St. Tammany Bank & Trust Co. v. Winfield, C.C.A. La., 263 F. 371.

Proof showing defendant corporations to be separate entities

Where a creditor's bill, filed by a creditor of two corporations, joined such corporations and an individual, alleging that he created the corporations as dummies for the conduct of his own business and invested their earnings in property, title to which was taken in his own name, and the aggregate of its claims against the two corporations was sufficient to give the court jurisdiction, but the claims singly were not, a finding that the corporations were not so organized, but were separate entities, does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to grant complainant any relief to which the proofs show it to be entitled under the pleadings.—Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Walker Grain Co., D.C.Tex., 3 F.2d

Effect of subsequent pleadings. Where plaintiff's demand is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction, its jurisdiction is not ousted by an answer disclaiming a portion of plaintiff's demand, or contesting only a portion of it;[97] nor is jurisdiction ousted by the assertion or establishment of a set-off or counterclaim, even though such set-off or counterclaim, when deducted from the amount involved under the complaint, reduces such amount below the jurisdictional minimum.[98] An answer denying plaintiff's allegation of damages does not affect the court's jurisdiction.[99] When the jurisdictional amount is in question, the tendering of a counterclaim or a cross bill in an amount which in itself, or added to the amount claimed in the petition, makes up a sum equal to the amount necessary to the jurisdiction of the court establishes jurisdiction, whatever may be the state of plaintiff's complaint,[1] and it has been held that the amount of a set-off asserted by defendant may be added to the amount involved under the complaint to make up the jurisdictional amount;[2] but it has also been held that a counterclaim asserted by defendant, not as a basis for affirmative relief, but only for the purpose of having the amount thereof deducted from plaintiff's recovery, if any, cannot supply a deficiency in the jurisdictional amount.[3] If the amount involved under the complaint is sufficient to confer jurisdiction, the court has jurisdiction of counterclaims involving matters directly connected with matters set up in the bill, even though the amounts involved under the counterclaims are less than the jurisdictional amount.[4] The court has jurisdiction where a cross complaint impleading a third party shows that the controversy involves more than the jurisdictional amount;[5] but, where the claims against the impleaded parties are separate and distinct from the controversy involved in the main action, if they are not sufficient to satisfy the jurisdictional requirements as to amount, the court acquires no jurisdiction as to them by virtue of its jurisdiction over the main action.[6] An amendment reducing the amount claimed below the jurisdictional minimum ordinarily relates back to the commencement of the action and deprives the court of jurisdiction;[7] but this does not apply where the amendment is based on events occurring after the filing of the bill.[8] Where a bill showed two separate causes of action and the court ordered the filing of separate bills, the inclusion in one of the amended bills of the amount which accrued since the filing of the original bill was held proper.[9]

(3) Evidence

The sufficiency of the amount in controversy may be shown by evidence, the admissibility, weight, and sufficiency of which are governed by general rules.

That the necessary amount in controversy is involved may be shown by the evidence.[10] General rules of evidence are applicable to the question of the admissibility of evidence relating to the value or amount in controversy,[11] and weight and suffi-

§ 311. —— Issuance of Writs

Writs of scire facias and mandamus are abolished in so far as district courts are concerned, but before their abolition, the district courts had authority to issue writs of scire facias, and could issue writs of mandamus and prohibition, although only in aid of a jurisdiction previously acquired and never as an original proceeding. District courts may issue writs of injunction, but not where their issuance would have the effect of a writ of mandamus which the court is not authorized to issue; they may also issue writs of ne exeat, and any other writs not specifically provided for which are necessary for the exercise of their jurisdiction.

In addition to certain enumerated writs discussed hereinafter in this section, district courts have general power to issue all writs not specifically provided for by statute which may be necessary for the exercise of their jurisdiction and agreeable to the usages and principles of law.[13]

Scire facias and mandamus. The writs of scire facias and mandamus are abolished by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure,[14] but similar relief is made available under the practice prescribed by the rules,[15] and the substantive rights of the parties are governed by the principles formerly applied in cases involving those writs.[16]

Before their abolition, writs of scire facias were among those which district courts were expressly authorized to issue.[17] The power to issue writs of mandamus was not expressly granted, and in view of the fact that general power to issue writs was limited to such as might be necessary for the exercise of the court's jurisdiction, the rule became well established that, unless specially authorized by statute,[18] the district court, like its predecessor, the circuit court, had no original jurisdiction in man-

General grant of jurisdiction; revenue laws

(1) An action for a writ of mandamus is not an "action at law" or a "suit in equity" under the code provisions respecting original jurisdiction of district courts.—Dick v. Tevlin, D.C.N.Y., 37 F.Supp. 836.

(2) So, the general jurisdiction conferred on district courts over all suits of a civil nature at law or in damus,[19] but could issue a writ of mandamus only in aid of a jurisdiction previously acquired.[20]

Prohibition. A district court has no power to issue a writ of prohibition except when necessary in aid of a jurisdiction previously acquired.[21]

Injunctions. The district court has power to issue writs of injunction.[22] However, under the rule that it had no original jurisdiction in mandamus, it was held that the court had no jurisdiction of a suit for an injunction, where the issuance thereof would have the same effect as the issuance of a writ of mandamus,[23] and this practice rule applied to a preventive injunction[24] as well as to a mandatory equity arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States does not confer on those courts jurisdiction over applications for mandamus, where that relief is the object of the suit.—In re Higdon, D.C.Mo., 269 F. 150.

Proceedings held not ancillary

Petition for writ of mandamus to compel penitentiary warden to produce petitioner for hearing before United States commissioner under Indigent Convict Act after court had discharged writ of habeas corpus because of nonpayment of fines imposed on petitioner, and warden had refused to produce petitioner as directed by commissioner's mandate, was held not in aid of court's jurisdiction, but original proceeding in mandamus, over which district court has no jurisdiction.—Hogan v. Hill, D.C.Pa., 9 F.Supp. 975, affirmed, C.C.A., 78 F.2d 1017.

Persons not parties

The fact that such jurisdiction is merely ancillary does not preclude its exercise over persons not parties to the judgment sought to be enforced.—Labette County Com'rs v. U. S., Kan., 5 S.Ct. 108, 112 U.S. 217, 28 L.Ed. 698—25 C.J. p 697 note 22.

Enjoining refusal to act

(1) A suit to enjoin an officer from refusing to perform an act, although expressed in the form of a double negative, is equivalent to a prayer for a direct command to perform it, and hence is without the jurisdiction of the district court.—Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Sprague, D.C.N.Y., 4 F.Supp. 499.

(2) However, a distinction has been drawn between such a case and the case of an injunction restraining an official from refusing to perform an act on some particular ground which he sets up as a consideration legally controlling.—Wilson v. Bowers, D.C.N.Y., 14 F.2d 976.

XII. COURTS OF TERRITORIES AND OUTLYING POSSESSIONS, AND PROVISIONAL COURTS

Although a territorial court is a legislative, rather than a constitutional, court, it is its province to declare the law of the territory and, within its sphere of action, it possesses the independence of the judiciary generally.

In the exercise of the power, granted to it by the constitution, to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States, congress may, as shown supra § 2, create territorial courts and confer on them judicial power. The courts so created are legislative courts[28] and not district courts of the United States in the sense that the latter are constitutional courts created under the judiciary article of the Constitution,[29] even though they are vested with jurisdiction identical with, or similar to, that vested in district courts of the United States.[30] A territorial legislature in conferring or limiting the appellate jurisdiction of the territorial courts is controlled by the organic act of the territory and other acts of congress with relation thereto, and legislation in conflict therewith is invalid;[31] but the territorial legislature may prescribe reasonable conditions not in conflict with such acts of congress.[32]

The principle of an independent judiciary is recognized in the territories.[33] The judiciary may and should, whenever necessary, protect itself against legislative inroads on the judiciary's sphere of action;[34] and it may, in general, do what is necessary to maintain its independence and effectiveness.[35] The courts may declare the invalidity of an act of the territorial legislative body,[36] even though the statute in question has been given effect by the court in previous cases in which the validity of the statute was not in issue.[37] The arguments of policy in favor of having the state courts declare the law of the state are applicable to the question whether territorial courts should declare the law of the territories with the least possible interference.[38]

Virgin Islands. The judicial power of the Virgin Islands is, by 48 U.S.C.A. § 1405x, vested in a court designated "the District Court of the Virgin Islands" and in courts of inferior jurisdiction established by local law. The district court consists of two divisions, 48 U.S.C.A. § 1405z, and its jurisdiction is conferred and defined by statute, 48 U.S.C.A. §§ 1406, 1406a, as is also the jurisdiction of the inferior courts, 48 U.S.C.A. § 1406d. Appeals lie from the judgments and rulings of the inferior courts to the district court, 48 U.S.C.A. § 140[illegible]. Under the local law, the allowance of costs in an action of an equitable nature is within the discretion of the district court.[39]

§ 313. Former Territories Now Admitted as States

Judgments and orders of courts of former territories were upheld where they were within the jurisdiction of such courts to render or make and errors, if any, therein were not prejudicial. An appeal to another territorial court was governed by statutory provisions.

A judgment of a court of a former territory was rendered with full jurisdiction where the court had jurisdiction of the subject matter of, and of the persons of the parties to, the action and the judgment was of a nature not only permitted, but required, by the pleadings and stipulations of the parties.[40] The appellee or defendant in error was not entitled to a notice of the application for the allowance of an appeal or writ of error, unless notice was required by statute.[41] It was essential that an appeal bond be conditioned according to law[42] and be for the amount fixed by the clerk, where he was empowered to fix the amount.[43] Error in dismissing an appeal was not prejudicial where appellant could take a second appeal at any time within the period prescribed by law.[44]

Full jurisdiction in probate proceedings was properly conferred on probate courts by a territorial legislature.[45]

§ 314. Alaska

In the territory of Alaska the district court has both general jurisdiction and the jurisdiction of district courts of the United States.

The district court of the territory of Alaska has a dual jurisdiction and acts in a dual capacity,[46] it being invested with the jurisdiction of district courts of the United States and with general jurisdiction in civil, equity,[47] criminal, see Criminal Law § 124, and admiralty, see Admiralty § 3 a, cases. It has been considered that the district court of Alaska is not, strictly speaking, a court of the United States, and does not come within the purview of the acts of congress which speak of "courts of the United States" only.[48] While it has been subsequently provided by statute that the court shall be deemed a court of the United States, such statute does not make the court a constitutional court.[49] However, Alaska is one of the territories of the United States, and its district court is the supreme court of the territory.[50] It must follow the decisions of the federal supreme court in preference to those of state courts.[51] Federal courts of district of Alaska as bankruptcy court are considered in Bankruptcy § 19. The district court for the District of Alaska created by the Organic Act of 1884, 23 U.S.St. at L. p 24 c 53, if not abolished, was supplanted by the courts created by the Alaska Code, Act June 6, 1900, 31 U.S.St. at L. p 321 c 786, and their jurisdiction is limited by the provisions of such Code.—U. There is no authority in incorporated towns in Alaska to create municipal courts independent of those created by congress, and from which there is neither appeal nor other supervision.[52]

§ 315. Canal Zone

There are in the Canal Zone magistrate's courts having jurisdiction of minor causes and one district court having general jurisdiction.

In 1904, under the authority of an act of congress, a complete system of courts was created for the Canal Zone;[53] in 1912 an act of congress provided for magistrate's courts, created a district court with two divisions, and divided civil jurisdiction between the magistrate's courts and the district court; in 1922 a federal statute enlarged the jurisdiction of the district court; and in 1933 some amendments were made to the statutes relating to the civil jurisdiction of the district court, see 48 U.S.C.A. § 1345, and of the magistrate's courts, see 48 U.S.C.A. § 1342. There is but one district court in the Canal Zone.[54] In addition to general jurisdiction given district courts of the United States, it has practically the same jurisdiction as a state court of unlimited civil jurisdiction.[55] Congress can, and at one time did, delegate to the president authority to make rules of practice in the district court;[56] but its present provision is that the rules of the district court shall be prescribed by the district judge, see 48 U.S.C.A. § 1344.

Formerly there were circuit courts[57] and a supreme court.[58] There are, of course, no state courts in the Canal Zone.[59]

§ 316. Hawaii

In Hawaii there are superior and inferior local courts with jurisdiction prescribed by local laws; and there is also a district court with the jurisdiction of a district court of the United States.

Effect is accorded a federal statute vesting the judicial power of the territory of Hawaii in one supreme court, circuit courts, and such inferior courts as the legislature may from time to time establish,[60] and declaring, 48 U.S.C.A. § 631, that, except as otherwise provided in the federal statutes and until the legislature shall otherwise provide, the laws of Hawaii in force prior to April 30, 1900, concerning the several courts and their jurisdiction and procedure, shall continue in force. There is also established in Hawaii a district court which has all the jurisdiction of a district court of the United States.[61] The latter court bears the same relation to the territorial courts as other federal Court has jurisdiction of particular case where it has jurisdiction of the subject matter and defendant is not a transient, but is residing within the Canal Zone for the purpose of carrying on business.—De Jan v. De Jan, C.C.A.Canal Zone, 18 F.2d 690.

Jurisdiction

(1) A circuit court had plenary jurisdiction.—Kung Ching Chong v. Wing Chong, 2 Canal Zone 25.

(2) However, it did not have jurisdiction of a case pending in a Panama court on Febr. 26, 1904, unless the Panama court surrendered jurisdiction.—Montilla v. Herbruger, 2 Canal Zone 154.

58. U.S.—Smith v. Jackson, Canal Zone, 241 F. 747, 154 C.C.A. 449, affirmed 38 S.Ct. 353, 246 U.S. 388, 62 L.Ed. 788.

In the exercise of its original jurisdiction, the supreme court could issue writs of mandamus, but its only authority in this respect was such as was specifically conferred by law.—Canal Zone v. Gudger, 2 Canal Zone 69.

Appellate matters

(1) The writ of certiorari could not be made to serve the purposes of an appeal to the supreme court.—Calderon v. Coquard, 1 Canal Zone 32.

(2) The court would not disturb a finding fully sustained by evidence.—Lam Hing v. Lynch, 2 Canal Zone 271.

(3) It would not reverse a judgment because of the exercise of the trial court's discretion as to the manner of allowing a witness to testify from a memorandum, unless a party had been clearly prejudiced thereby.—Panama R. Co. v. Ogilvie, 2 Canal Zone 150.

25 C.J. p 983 note 42.

The rules of evidence in criminal cases are those in force in Hawaii at the time of the organization as a territory, except as subsequently courts bear to the state courts in their respective districts.[62] It is the province of Hawaiian courts to construe and apply Hawaiian laws in accordance with their understanding thereof;[63] their decisions based on local law must be accorded deference,[64] and, unless manifestly erroneous, must be accepted as correct and followed[65] by federal courts where no federal question is involved; and the preference of a federal court as to the correct rule of general or local law applicable in a particular case should not be imposed on Hawaii unless there is a clear departure from ordinary legal principles in the decision of an Hawaiian court.[66] However, where no decree is entered, a decision of the highest court of the territory is not binding on a federal court.[67]

Review generally. Under the statutes, review may be had upon a bill of exceptions;[68] but such a bill, unlike a writ of error or an appeal, does not bring the entire case or its record to the appellate court, the only thing which the court passes on being whether the exceptions are good or bad.[69] Also a review may be had on a writ of error,[70] even in an equitable suit;[71] but, as shown infra this section, in respect of appeals from certain courts to other courts there are limitations on the scope of appeals and the actions in which they lie. A judgment or decree will be affirmed on appeal or writ of error if the record shows it to be correct, although the trial court may have assigned erroneous reasons for making it.[72]

Courts of equity generally. Pertinent statutes are construed not to limit courts of equity to the usage and practice of English courts of equity, but rather to permit them to follow the usage and practice of American courts whenever that usage and practice shall seem to them for any reason to be preferable.[73]

The supreme court is not a court of general original common-law jurisdiction, but primarily is an appellate court, with only such original jurisdiction as has been conferred on it.[74] It may, on appeal, review the judgment of a circuit judge at chambers;[75] and it may reject findings on conflict-

Exceptions and writs of error distinguished

"Exceptions and error are inherent proceedings of different character. On exceptions, various specific rulings, whether interlocutory or final, whether brought up immediately or only after final judgment, are made direct and independent subjects for review; only so much of the record is brought up as is necessary for passing upon the specific exceptions; the decision usually is that the exceptions be sustained or overruled and that such further proceedings be had as the rulings on the exceptions call for. On error the final judgment alone is brought up, and specific rulings, whether excepted to or not, are considered only incidentally in passing upon the correctness of the final judgment; the entire record is brought up, and the judgment of the appellate court is such as the facts and law warrant, as shown by the entire case."—Territory of Hawaii v. Cotton Bros., 17 Hawaii 374, 379.

Exceptions dismissed

Where, in a jury-waived trial, the parties by stipulation limited the issue to one question of fact on which the evidence was conflicting but admittedly sufficient to support the court's decision determining that issue, exceptions, which raise only the questions of the sufficiency of the evidence and the findings of fact, will be dismissed.—Ilaga v. Criminal jurisdiction of Hawaii supreme court see Criminal Law § 124.

Supreme court is an intermediate court of appeal in a case where the appellant has the right of appeal from an adverse decision by this court to the United States circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit and a decision by this court on a former appeal of the cause does not become the law of the case.—Goo v. Hee Fat, 35 Hawaii 827.

Notice of appeal

(1) A severance is effected, under a statute, by service of the notice of appeal on all the nonappealing parties against whom the decision, judgment, order, or decree was rendered.—Lord v. Lord, 35 Hawaii 10.

(2) However, service on appellees or on nonjoining parties of a copy of

ing evidence and make findings according to its own views of the testimony;[76] but on appeal from a judgment at chambers in a contempt case the facts are not to be reviewed and new evidence is not admissible;[77] and no appeal lies from an order of a circuit court in a law case to the supreme court.[78] An appeal from a district court to the supreme court on points of law is limited to the single point or points of law certified by the district magistrate.[79] Where an exception is sustained and the cause remanded, the new decision in the lower court will bear the date of its rendition and the supreme court will not amend its decision so as to direct the lower court to amend the latter's decision as of the date of its original decision.[80] After remand, following a decision that the trial court erred in not granting defendant's motion for nonsuit, plaintiff is not entitled to introduce further evidence without a showing which would warrant reopening of the case.[81]

Where, under statutory authority, an agreed case is submitted to the supreme court, the formal submission takes the place of pleadings and the issues for determination are controlled and limited thereby.[82]

A circuit court has superior and general jurisdiction.[83] It has concurrent jurisdiction with the supreme court of an appeal on points of law from a district magistrate;[84] and the hearing of such an appeal is not a trial within the meaning of a statute prohibiting trials within certain months;[85] but a general appeal, requiring a trial de novo, as distinguished from an appeal on points of law, does not lie to it from a district magistrate's judgment of nonsuit for failure of proof.[86] Its jurisdiction on appeal from the land court is limited to issues framed by that court.[87]

The statutory jurisdiction of a circuit judge at chambers to decree the distribution of intestate estates does not extend to a case where decedent left a will, even though there is a partial intestacy.[88]

the notice of appeal is not essential to the jurisdiction of the supreme court to review the decree appealed from.—Lalakea v. Laupahoehoe Sugar Co., 35 Hawaii 262.

(3) While the statutes do not require that a notice of appeal be signed by or on behalf of the appellant, a notice of appeal should indicate from whom it emanates in order that the appellee or nonjoining parties may be advised that the notice of appeal comes from a proper source. Where it is recited in the body of a joint notice of appeal that the notice is given by and on behalf of an adult respondent personally and by and on behalf of a minor respondent by the adult respondent as his next friend and the name of adult respondent is alone subscribed to the notice of appeal, the signature of the adult respondent is sufficient to indicate from whom the notice of appeal emanates and that it comes from a proper source and it is immaterial that there was not repeated in connection with the name subscribed to the joint notice of appeal the language embodied in the notice of appeal indicating on whose behalf the joint notice of appeal was given. —Lalakea v. Laupahoehoe Sugar Co., supra.

(4) Where the caption of a notice of appeal and appeal contains the names of all of the parties to the cause, both petitioners and respondents, or the caption of an appeal and notice of appeal contains the names of the petitioners but the name of only one respondent, the other respondents being referred to by the abbreviation "et al.," to the extent that the respective captions include the names of the parties, the respective appellants use the names of the parties respectively appearing therein within the meaning of a statute permitting, as a substitute for summons and severance, the use, on an appeal by some of the parties against whom a decree was rendered, of the names of all such persons; and where the appellants use the names of all of the parties complainant and respondents affected by the decree, the notice necessarily includes all of the persons against whom the decree to be reviewed was rendered within the meaning of the statute.—Lalakea v. Laupahoehoe Sugar Co., supra.

amount claimed exceeds a prescribed amount[89] or where the title to real estate is involved,[90] provided, in the latter case, an affidavit in support of a plea to the jurisdiction complies with a rule of court by showing the source, nature, and extent of the title claimed by defendant.[91] While strict rules of pleading do not apply in a court of a district magistrate, and the complaint need not contain a prayer for process,[92] nevertheless, it is necessary to state all essential facts required to entitle one to a special order in a statutory proceeding.[93]

§ 317. Philippine Islands

In the Philippine Islands the various courts are substantially the same as those which existed at the time of the acquisition of the islands from Spain.

The judicial system prevailing in the Philippine Islands at the time of their acquisition from Spain has been continued substantially, first by executive order, and then by legislation.[94] The judicial power is vested in a supreme court, courts of first instance, courts of justices of the peace, municipal courts, and other special tribunals.[95] As judicially noted,[96] the jurisdiction of these courts respectively was fixed originally by act of the Philippine commission passed June 11, 1901. Subsequent acts of congress provide that the supreme court and the courts of first instance shall possess and exercise jurisdiction as theretofore provided, and such additional jurisdiction as may thereafter be provided by law, see 48 U.S.C.A. § 1071,[97] and that the municipal courts shall have the jurisdiction then provided by law subject in all matters to such alteration and amendment as may be provided by law, see 48 U.S.C.A. § 1078. The admiralty jurisdiction of the supreme court and the courts of first instance cannot be changed except by act of congress, see 48 U.S.C.A. § 1072. The supreme court and the courts of first instance are courts of record.

The supreme court has original jurisdiction in, and only in, the cases provided by law.[98] It has appellate jurisdiction of all actions and special proceedings properly brought to it from the courts of first instance, and from other tribunals when specially provided by law;[99] but an appeal lies to the supreme court only when permitted by law;[1] and if the case has been once appealed from a justice of the peace or municipal court it cannot be appealed from the court of the first instance unless it involves the validity of a statute or municipal ordinance.[2] An act of the Philippine legislature authorizing the supreme court to sit either in banc or in divisions is valid.[3]

Courts of first instance. Courts, known and designated as courts of first instance, are a part of the judicial system of the Philippine Islands.[4] They are the courts of general original jurisdiction, both civil and criminal,[5] and also have appellate jurisdiction over all causes arising in justices' and oth-

Election contests

Under statute, the judge of the court of first instance having jurisdiction in the judicial district in which an election was held, has exclusive jurisdiction to try and decide election protests and to issue a writ of mandamus to the board of canvassers to correct its certificate in conformity with the decision of

er inferior courts in their respective provinces.[6] While they are given jurisdiction in all cases in which the subject of litigation is not capable of pecuniary estimation, where the subject is so capable, the jurisdictional amount which must be in controversy is one hundred dollars exclusive of interest.[7]

Justices of the peace are given jurisdiction of specified minor causes, see the C.J.S. title Justices of the Peace § 26, also 35 C.J. p 487 note 26–p 492 note 62.

§ 318. Puerto Rico

There are in Puerto Rico certain insular courts, as well as the district court of the United States for Puerto Rico. The latter court, although only a territorial court, has jurisdiction somewhat broader than that of federal district courts in the states.

The judicial power of Puerto Rico is vested in the established courts and tribunals of Puerto Rico, see 48 U.S.C.A. § 861, including the supreme court,[8] insular district courts,[9] municipal courts,[10] and courts of justices of the peace.[11] A Puerto Rican statute conferring on the supreme court exclusive original jurisdiction of quo warranto proceedings for violation of a congressional enactment prohibiting agricultural corporations from owning more than five hundred acres of land has been upheld.[12] Both the supreme court[13] and the district courts[14] have original jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus; but ordinarily, and except in certain cases, an application for a writ of mandamus may and should be presented in the first instance to a district court.[15]

The right of appeal is a statutory privilege;[16] and an appeal will lie in cases or proceedings where it is authorized by statute.[17] The supreme court may, notwithstanding the absence of a bill of exceptions, review matters constituting parts of the record proper;[18] but it will not take judicial notice of the judgment of another appellate court where such judgment is not part of the record and the court has no knowledge that the judgment was directly submitted to the trial court.[19]

The district court of the United States for Puerto Rico has a unique status.[20] It derives its authority wholly from congress.[21] Although it is a

Acts expressly applicable to court
Congress has always defined the jurisdiction of the district court of the United States for Puerto Rico by acts expressly applicable to that court. In defining jurisdiction of United States district courts, congress did not intend to define jurisdiction of United States district court for Puerto Rico.—Munoz v. Porto Rico Ry. Light & Power Co., C.C.A. Puerto Rico, 83 F.2d 262, certiorari denied 56 S.Ct. 955, 298 U.S. 689, 80 L.Ed. 1408.

Statute relating to terms construed
A statute requiring regular terms of court to be held at two designated places at prescribed times, and authorizing special terms to be held at a designated third place at such stated times as the judge may deem expedient, is construed to mean that a regular term may be held at the third place at a time to be specially designated by the judge, and not that the term held there is to have the mere territorial or congressional court, and is not a constitutional court or a true United States court established under Article III of the Constitution to administer the judicial power of the United States,[22] nevertheless Puerto Rico constitutes a federal judicial district, 48 U.S.C.A. § 863; the court is called the district court of the United States for Puerto Rico;[23] it has, in some respects, broader jurisdiction than that of United States district courts in the states,[24] it having, under the statute, 48 U.S.C.A. § 863, jurisdiction of all cases cognizable in district courts of the United States,[25] and in addition, jurisdiction of all controversies where all the parties on either side of the controversy are citizens or subjects of a foreign state or states, or citizens of a state, territory, or district of the United States,[26] not domiciled in Puerto Rico,[27] where the matter in dispute exceeds three thousand dollars, exclusive of interest or costs,[28] and of all controversies in which there is a separable controversy involving the jurisdictional amount and in which all the parties on either side of such separable controversy are citizens or subjects of the character mentioned above,[29] and it not being within the application of that provision of 28 U.S.C.A. § 41(1) which is known as the Johnson Act and which deprives federal district courts of jurisdiction to enjoin enforcement of orders of state rate-making bodies.[30]

The court is required to proceed in the same manner as district courts of the United States.[31] It conforms to the local law and formerly to the local procedure,[32] except in matters in admiralty and equity,[33] to the same extent, and only to the same extent, as other district courts;[34] but at the present time a statute, 48 U.S.C.A. § 873a, brings actions of a civil nature in such court within the application of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c. District court rules have been held valid.[35]

character of a special, as contradistinguished from a regular, term.—American R. Co. of Porto Rico v. Castro, Puerto Rico 27 S.Ct. 466, 204 U.S. 453, 51 L.Ed. 564.

§ 319. Effect of Admission of Territory as State

On the admission of a territory as a state, the territorial courts are extinguished and cases pending therein are to be transferred to other courts in accordance with provisions for such transfer.

The general rule, stated in the C.J.S. title States § 22, also 59 C.J. p 70 note 93, that, on the admission of a territory as a state, the territorial government is extinguished and superseded applies to territorial courts,[38] notwithstanding any provision impliedly to the contrary in the state constitution, and even though there is no appointment of a district judge to the United States district court established therein.[39]

Transfer of causes. On the admission of a territory as a state, provision is ordinarily made for a transfer of cases pending in the territorial courts to other courts, and such provision, as properly construed, is given effect.[40] The character of a case is ordinarily made the determining factor in ascertaining the court to which it should be transferred,[41] the general rule being that cases which are of such character as to fall within the jurisdiction of the federal court should be transferred to the United States court established in the new state,[42] while cases which are not of this character are properly transferred to the state court within whose jurisdiction they fall.[43] If the federal and state courts have concurrent jurisdiction of pending causes, they may be transferred to either the state or federal courts by either party possessing that option under existing laws,[44] unless specific provision is made for such cases, in which event they must, of course, be transferred to the court designated.[45] It has been asserted, however, that the transfer of causes depends on the judicial status of states, when the law was passed, with reference to judicial circuits and whether or not they were then attached to any circuit.[46]

While a state statute authorizing a further transfer of a pending probate case, from the court of the county to which it was transferred on admission of the territory to statehood, to the court of another county where venue would lie if the matter had arisen since admission to statehood is valid,[47] it merely authorizes the second transfer and does not of itself oust the jurisdiction of the court to which the original transfer was made.[48]

§ 320. Provisional Courts

A provisional court is a federal court with jurisdiction and powers governed by the order from which it derives its authority.

A provisional court established in conquered or occupied territory by the military authorities, or the provisional government, is a federal court deriving its existence and all its powers from the federal government.[49] The jurisdiction and powers of such a court are governed by the order from which it derives its authority.[50]

XIII. UNITED STATES COURT FOR CHINA

§ 321. Establishment and Organization

The United States court for China was established by statute in 1906 and opened for business in 1907. In addition to a judge, there were a clerk, marshal, and district attorney.

During its exercise of extraterritorial rights in China, relinquished by treaty of January 11, 1943, the United States court for China was established by the United States by Act June 30, 1906, c 3934 § 1, 22 U.S.C.A. § 191. The court was presided over by one judge with a staff consisting of a district attorney, marshal, and clerk, all of whom were appointed by the president, 22 U.S.C.A. § 197. It was exclusively a court of the United States, and belonged in the same class with the district courts.[51] It was, however, a legislative court.[52]

§ 322. Jurisdiction and Procedure

With the exception of minor civil and criminal cases, the United States court for China succeeded to the jurisdiction previously exercised by consular courts in China: it had jurisdiction of appeals from the consular courts: and it had supervisory control of the administration of decedents' estates, by consuls or vice consuls. Any alien might resort to the court; but defendant was required to be an American citizen or an American corporation doing business in China.

With the exception of civil cases wherein the amount involved did not exceed five hundred dollars and criminal cases wherein the penalty prescribed did not exceed a fine of one hundred dollars or imprisonment for sixty days, or both, the United States court for China had exclusive jurisdiction in all cases and judicial proceedings whereof jurisdiction might have been exercised, prior to statutory establishment of the court, by United States consuls and ministers by law and by virtue of treaties between the United States and China, see 22 U.S.C.A. § 191; it had jurisdiction of appeals from final judgments of consular courts in China, see 22 U.S.C.A. § 192; and it had supervisory control over the discharge by consuls and vice consuls of the duties prescribed by the laws of the United States relating to the estates of decedents in China, see 22 U.S.C.A. § 193. The territorial jurisdiction of the court extended to, and its process ran throughout, all Chinese territory. In so far as personal jurisdiction was concerned, it was necessary and sufficient that defendant be a citizen of the United States[53] and, in a criminal case, it was assumed that he was a citizen at the time the offense was committed.[54] In the absence of a provision in a treaty with a particular country taking away jurisdiction over citizens or subjects of that country, every alien had access to the court where defendant was an American citizen.[55] Where defendant was a citizen of the United States and the controversy had its origin in China, it was not necessary that the residence of the parties be in China;[56] but where defendant was a corporation incorporated in a particular state, it must have been doing business in China in such manner and to such extent as to warrant the inference that it was present there and subject to the jurisdiction of the court.[57]

The United States court for China derived its entire authority from the federal government;[58] and it had no jurisdiction except that conferred by the laws of the United States.[59] Its jurisdiction was not dependent on treaties between the United States and nations other than China;[60] but in ascertaining the extent of its jurisdiction it was necessary to look to treaty provisions with China and acts of congress passed to give effect thereto.[61] The court having only limited jurisdiction,[62] it was necessary that its jurisdiction of a particular cause affirmatively appear;[63] and unless it did so appear

Rules of court. The act establishing the United States court for China confirmed and continued in force the old consular court rules, see 22 U.S.C.A. § 196, with all their defects, and it was even held that they prevailed over acts of congress relating to the same subject;[65] but that provision likewise offered a remedy for such defects (which, as suggested,[66] congress thus appeared to recognize) by authorizing the judge of the United States court "to modify and supplement said rules," see 22 U.S.C.A. § 196. A statement of the judge in a particular case as to a matter of fact, which had no support in the evidence, could not establish a court rule operating retroactively.[67]

XIV. COURTS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

There are both inferior and superior courts in the District of Columbia. The supreme court, now called the district court, and the United States court of appeals for the District are superior courts with jurisdiction, in respect of general federal matters, corresponding to that of the federal district courts and circuit courts of appeals located elsewhere, and with further jurisdiction and powers conferred by congress in the exercise of its constitutional power to legislate for the District.

Congress is the only body which may establish the courts of the District of Columbia.[68] The judicial power in the District of Columbia is, by D.C. Code § 11-101, vested in inferior courts, namely, the municipal court, the juvenile court, and the police court; and superior courts, namely, the district court of the United States for the District of Columbia, the United States court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and the supreme court of the United States. The appellate jurisdiction of the United States supreme court in respect of the judgments and decrees of the court of appeals and the supreme court of the District of Columbia is considered supra §§ 231–234; and detailed consideration is given hereinafter to the other courts, inferior courts being dealt with infra § 326, the supreme court, now known as the "District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia," infra § 325, and the United States court of appeals for the District of Columbia, formerly called the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, infra § 324.

Courts of the District of Columbia are parts of the federal judicial system.[69] They are federal courts or "courts of the United States" in certain senses,[70] for example, they are "federal courts" for the purpose of enforcing general federal laws[71] and "federal courts" in the sense that they are created by acts of congress in pursuance of provisions of the Constitution of the United States;[72] but whether the phrase "courts of the United States," as used in legislation, will include any or all of the courts of the District is a matter of statutory construction.[73] Subject to the guaranties of personal liberty contained in the amendments and in the original Constitution,[74] congress, in the exercise of its plenary power as the local legislature of the District of Columbia, has as much authority to vest courts of the District with a variety of jurisdiction and powers as a state legislature has to confer jurisdiction on its courts;[75] and it may, if it sees fit, unite legislative and judicial powers in a single hand.[76] Indeed, the courts of the District are vested not only with jurisdiction and power analagous to those of the federal courts within the several states, but also with powers analogous to those which states have vested in their own courts in order to perform the necessary judicial and administrative functions in the permanent federal territory which surrounds the seat of the government at Washington.[77]

The supreme court and the court of appeals of the District have jurisdiction, for the enforcement of general federal statutes within the District, corresponding to that of the federal district courts in the several districts and the several circuit courts of appeal,[78] and there is a complete parallel between such courts in the consideration and disposition of cases involving what, among the states, would be regarded as within federal jurisdiction.[79] These superior courts of the District are permanent federal courts, constituting parts of the federal judicial system, and vested generally with the same jurisdiction as that possessed by the inferior federal courts located elsewhere in respect of the cases enumerated in the judiciary article of the federal Constitution;[80] they are courts of the United States within the meaning of various statutes;[81] and they are constitutional courts of the United States, or inferior courts in the constitutional sense, having been ordained and established under the Constitution, article 3,[82] even though congress, under the constitutional grant of power to it to exercise exclusive legislation over the District, has conferred on them quasi-judicial or administrative functions, powers, or duties or jurisdiction over nonfederal causes of action.[83] As shown supra § 2, the grant of these additional powers is permissible, under the dual authority of congress over the district, as an exception to the general rule relating to inferior courts established under the judiciary article of the Constitution.

Trespass to personalty. The courts in the District of Columbia have a like jurisdiction in trespass to personalty with the English and state courts;[84] and at one time they were required, in the absence of statutory provisions, to apply the same common-law principles which regulate the mode of bringing such actions, the pleadings, and the proof;[85] but at the present time, as explained infra § 325, the procedure in civil actions in the district court is governed by Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U.S.C.A., following § 723c.

§ 324. Court of Appeals

a. In general

b. Review of decisions of other tribunals

a. In General

The United States court of appeals for the District of Columbia is a circuit court of appeals within the meaning of some statutes and rules of procedure. It lacks the original jurisdiction of a district court, but has statutory power to issue all necessary and proper remedial prerogative writs in aid of its appellate jurisdiction.

The court of appeals of the District of Columbia was created by an act of congress, approved February 9, 1893, 27 St. at L. p 434, and its name was changed to the United States court of appeals for the District of Columbia by Act of June 7, 1934, 48 St. at L. p 926. Although it has been held not to be a circuit court of appeals,[86] its jurisdiction, in respect of general federal matters, corresponds, as noted supra § 323, to that of the several circuit courts of appeals, it is held to be a circuit court of appeals within the meaning of a particular statute,[87] and, by virtue of an express provision in Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 81 (d), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, it or a justice thereof is included in any reference made in such rules to a circuit court of appeals or to a judge thereof. It is without jurisdiction over original suits conferred on district courts by 28 U.S.C.A. § 41;[88] it cannot entertain an original suit to annul a judgment or decree of a lower court;[89] and it cannot issue writs as a court of original jurisdiction.[90] While it has power, conferred by statute, to issue all necessary and proper remedial prerogative writs in aid of its appellate jurisdiction,[91] this statutory power does not authorize it to stay an order of a commission, pending an appeal therefrom, without requiring a bond,[92] and it has no inherent superintending or supervisory power over the inferior courts of the District that will warrant the issue of the writ of prohibition.[93]

As jurisdiction cannot be conferred on it by consent of the parties, want of jurisdiction cannot be waived by them, but may be taken advantage of at any time.[94]

(1) In General

In addition to such jurisdiction as is conferred on it by statutes, in force at the time, to review orders or decisions of commissions or administrative agencies, the United States court of appeals for the District of Columbia has statutory jurisdiction to review, by writ of error, a final judgment of the municipal court of the District and, by appeal, not only a final judgment, order, or decree of the supreme or district court of the District, but also an interlocutory order of such court which changes or affects the possession of property or from which the appellate court, in its discretion, allows an appeal on a showing that the allowance will be in the interest of justice.

In civil actions or proceedings, the United States court of appeals for the District of Columbia has jurisdiction, under the statutes, to review the judgments, orders, or decrees of the district court, formerly called the supreme court,[95] and the judgments of the municipal court;[96] and it has, or at times has had, under the statutes, jurisdiction to review the orders or decisions of various commissions or administrative agencies, such as the federal trade commission,[97] the federal communications commission,[98] and the patent office, see the C.J.S. title Patents § 136, also 48 C.J. p 161 note 59. Generally speaking, such jurisdiction as it has to review directly the action of administrative agencies is specially conferred by legislation relating specifically to the determinations of such agencies made subject to review, and prescribing the manner and extent of the review;[99] but in one instance the conclusion that the court had jurisdiction to review orders of a particular commission affecting persons within the district was arrived at by construction.[1] Under some former statutes relating to appeals from certain commissions or other administrative agencies, the court was deemed to act as a superior and revising agency in the administrative field and to exercise administrative, rather than judicial, jurisdiction.[2] It may have exclusive jurisdiction of appeals in a certain class of cases;[3] and in another class of cases it may be without jurisdiction of an appeal by reason of another court's having exclusive jurisdiction thereof under the pertinent statute.[4] It is invested with no power to supervise the proceedings, or review the judgments, of the court of claims.[5] The Trading with the Enemy Act, 50 U.S.C.A. appendix, did not change or modify in any respect the appellate jurisdiction of the court.[6] Review of intermediate appellate decisions in cases originating in former justice court is considered in the C.J.S. title Justices of the Peace § 234, also 35 C.J. p 855 note 52 [d].

The remedy by appeal is purely of statutory origin, and exists only when given by some statutory provision.[7] The right of appeal is subject to the control of congress, which may, in its discretion, grant or take away the remedy, and prescribe in what cases, under what circumstances, in what manner, and to or from what courts, appeals may be taken.[8] An appeal will not lie in those cases or proceedings to which the statutory provision cannot, under the liberal rules of construction applicable, reasonably be extended.[9]

The mode of obtaining review is by appeal where a review of a judgment, order, or decree of the supreme or district court is sought,[10] and by writ of error, where a review of a judgment of the municipal court is sought.[11] A writ of certiorari cannot ordinarily be made to serve the purposes of a writ of error or an appeal.[12]

Jurisdiction of lower court. The supreme court being without power, on motion, to vacate a judgment of the municipal court which has become final and been docketed in the office of the clerk of the supreme court, no appeal lies to the court of appeals from its refusal to grant such motion.[13] On the other hand, where the district court had jurisdiction in disbarment proceedings the court of appeals has jurisdiction of the subject matter on appeal;[14] and alleged irregularities, constituting error merely and not defeating jurisdiction in the fundamental sense, have no effect on the jurisdiction of either court.[15]

Nature and form of decision. Subject to the statutory exceptions hereinafter mentioned, an appeal or writ of error can be taken to the court of appeals only from a final judgment, order, or decree.[16] Review may be had, under the statutes, of the final judgments of the municipal court,[17] and of the final orders, judgments, and decrees of the supreme or district court,[18] as well as, in some cases, of the interlocutory orders of the supreme or district court,[19] but not of the municipal court,[20] in civil suits or proceedings. By virtue of express statutory provisions governing civil cases, review may be had of all interlocutory orders of the supreme or district court or any justice thereof whereby the possession of property is changed or affected, such as orders for the appointment of receivers, granting injunctions, dissolving writs of attachment, and the like,[21] and also of any other interlocutory order, in the discretion of the court of appeals, whenever it is made to appear to that court on petition that it will be in the interest of justice to allow such appeal.[22] However, the mere fact that an interlocutory order is made in an injunction or receivership proceeding does not make it appealable as a matter of right; to be so appealable, it must affirmatively change or affect the actual possession of property as it existed immediately before the order, it not being within the statute where it only preserves the status quo ante the order or reiterates a direction contained in a prior order.[23] Particular orders or decrees held final or otherwise appealable to, and reviewable by, the court of appeals include the district court's final approval of a sale under a deed of trust;[24] an order quashing an attachment of the property of a

nonresident;[25] an order refusing to quash a writ of ne exeat and directing that the writ continue in force;[26] a decree denying recovery on an injunction bond for attorney fees incurred in obtaining dissolution of an injunction pendente lite;[27] discretionary orders and decisions in probate proceedings;[28] a dismissal of a bill of partition on the ground that a disputed question of title is involved and plaintiffs have an adequate remedy at law, where the record shows that no disputed question of fact is involved;[29] an order dismissing the petition in habeas corpus proceedings;[30] and an order awarding the custody of a child.[31] Other particular orders, judgments, or decrees which have been held not directly reviewable on appeal or writ of error, or at least not appealable as a matter of right, include an order or decree overruling a motion to quash or set aside the writ or summons in an action or the service thereof;[32] a judgment, on demurrer to the declaration, dismissing the action as to part of the defendants, but leaving it standing as to the other defendants;[33] an order framing issues on the caveat of a will;[34] an order directing plaintiff, in an action by an attorney against his client, to deliver certain papers to defendant without prejudice to plaintiff's lien;[35] an order overruling a motion to vacate an order approving an executor's account;[36] a judgment or order opening, vacating, or setting aside a judgment, order, or decree previously rendered in the cause;[37] an order striking from the files a suggestion of rights by an entity which is not a party and has not filed a petition to intervene;[38] and a judgment, order, or decree, in so far merely as it awards or denies costs.[39] Also, no appeal lies from the action of the trial court on a motion for a new trial[40] or from the denial of a motion for rehearing;[41] and there is no final judgment or decree for the purpose of an appeal as long as the cause is still under the control of the trial court by reason of the pendency of a motion for a new trial, for rehearing, to set the judgment aside, or otherwise.[42] An appeal from the direction of a verdict cannot be maintained where no judgment was entered on the directed verdict and none was intended.[43] An order of punishment in contempt proceedings is appealable where the contempt consists of attempting corruptly to influence a grand juror,[44] but not where it consists of refusal to comply with other orders of the court in a receivership proceeding.[45]

The appellate court may entertain an appeal from a decree entered pursuant to its mandate;[46] and although a judgment, order, or decree is void, and not merely erroneous, it is so far to be considered in existence by the appellate court that it may be reviewed and reversed on writ of error or appeal, and the parties restored to the position they originally occupied.[47]

(2) Persons Entitled and Parties

Any aggrieved party may maintain the proper appeal or error proceeding. Where the judgment is several, the parties may appeal severally without affecting the interests of nonappealing parties.

To be entitled to maintain an appeal or writ of error as a party aggrieved, within the meaning of the statutes, it is necessary and sufficient that a person be a party,[48] that he be interested in the subject matter of the suit, and that he be injuriously affected or aggrieved by the judgment, order, or decree complained of.[49] One who has been allowed by order of the court to intervene in a cause, or who has been treated as a party thereto, may appeal from a judgment, order, or decree therein affecting his interests.[50] Also, an executor or administrator may appeal from a judgment, order, or decree revoking his letters or removing him.[51] On the other hand, a party is not aggrieved by a judgment, order, decree, or ruling regularly rendered or made, on agreement or otherwise, with his express or implied consent, and therefore he cannot appeal or sue out a writ of error to review the same.[52]

Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 74, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, deals with joint and several appeals. In a case not governed by the rules, it was said that the common-law rule enforced in the federal courts is that where the judgment is joint, all parties must join in the appeal, but that where the judgment is several, the parties may appeal severally without affecting the interests of non-appealing parties.[53]

(3) Presentation and Reservation in Lower Court of Grounds of Review

Proper and timely objections in the lower court are necessary to obtain a review of most questions, and exceptions are necessary in respect of rulings which must be brought into the record by a bill of exceptions. Both objections and exceptions must be specific.

Ordinarily, the trial court cannot properly be said to have erred in respect of a matter not brought to its attention;[54] and errors which it was given no opportunity to correct will not be considered on appeal.[55] Objections cannot be made, for the first time on appeal, to the validity of the contract or instrument in suit;[56] to the propriety of the form of the action or the nature of the proceeding;[57] that a bill is bad for multifariousness;[58] that a plea, answer, or subsequent pleading is defective or insufficient;[59] to rulings on motions relating to pleadings;[60] to the improper admission of letters in evidence;[61] to the competency of a witness to testify;[62] to remarks of counsel;[63] or to the submission of an issue or question of fact to the jury.[64] So, also, the question of the identity of a witness cannot be raised for the first time on appeal;[65] and a statute will not be treated as controlling on appeal where its applicability was not raised in the trial court.[66] However, an objection to the complete want of a necessary party may be taken for the first time in the reviewing court;[67] and sometimes the court considers a question not raised, or a defense not interposed, below.[68]

To be available, an objection must be a timely one.[69] Furthermore, it must be specific,[70] especially when it pertains to instructions,[71] no ground or grounds of complaint against instructions other than those specified being considered by the appellate court.[72]

Tender of the expected answer to a question which is in proper form and clearly admits of a favorable and relevant answer is not necessary as a condition precedent to review of its exclusion.[73]

Motions. Where defendant, at the close of plaintiff's evidence and again at the close of all the evidence, moved for a directed verdict on the ground of the statute of limitations, and after verdict moved for a new trial, his failure to move to have the verdict set aside and judgment entered in accordance with his motion for a directed verdict does not prevent him from urging the statute of limitations on appeal.[74] Excessiveness of the verdict is not reviewable where the contention is raised for the first time on a motion for a new trial.[75]

Exceptions are necessary only to save those rulings which must be brought into the record by a bill of exceptions.[76] However, a statute which requires that technical errors, defects, or exceptions, not affecting the substantial rights of the parties, should be disregarded on appeal does not do away with the necessity of taking proper exceptions in order to save questions for review.[77] Exceptions must go further than merely to show that a particular ruling was objected and excepted to, and must show the grounds of objection, or the reasons why the ruling was erroneous.[78] A failure or refusal to charge as to certain matters is not available on appeal in the absence of an exception to the charge as given;[79] and, except where the charge in effect asserts but a single proposition,[80] an exception to the charge given must point out specifically the propositions of law objected to.[81] The question of the sufficiency of the evidence is raised by exceptions to the making of a finding of fact in favor of defendant and to the refusal to grant a new trial.[82] The foregoing rules must, in so far as appeals from the district court to the court of appeals are concerned, be viewed in the light of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 46, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, dispensing with the necessity of formal exceptions.

(4) Proceedings for, and Effect of Transfer of Cause; Supersedeas

An appeal should be taken and perfected in accordance with applicable provisions in force at the time; and where it is so taken and perfected, general rules are applied in determining the effect of the appeal and the supersedeas, if any, accompanying it as excluding or curtailing further action in the lower court. Where a motion for new trial, vacation of the judgment, or the like, is filed, the period for taking the appeal is computed from the determination of the motion.

The filing of a motion or petition for new trial, rehearing, or vacation or modification of the judgment suspends the running of the period within which an appeal may be taken, and such period begins to run anew from the date on which final action is taken on the petition or motion, whether it be denied or granted.[83] On the other hand, the death of either party after rendition or entry of the judgment, order, or decree does not suspend the running of the time within which an appeal must be brought, even though no personal representative has been appointed.[84]

Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 73, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, contains provisions dealing with appeal and supersedeas bonds which are applicable to appeals from the district court to the United States court of appeals for the District of Columbia: but while these provisions supersede some of the previously existing provisions in statutes, and court rules, they only modify other provisions, and still other provisions are left unaffected. Prior to the taking effect of the rules, it was held that the federal statutes requiring the taking of security are applicable to the courts of the District;[85] a decree cannot be superseded and the status quo of the subject matter of the suit maintained pending appeal except by an order of court in accordance with Equity Rules, rule 74, which is binding on the courts of the District;[86] a rule of court requiring a cost bond on appeal from the supreme court is not applicable to a review by means of a writ of error to the municipal court;[87] after the jurisdiction of the appellate court over an appeal has attached, power to permit or require new or additional security to be filed exists only in the appellate court;[88] the legality of an appeal cannot be made to depend on the validity of the title of the signer of the appeal bond to a corporate office;[89] and that a supersedeas will be accorded its proper effect.[90]

Although, if no supersedeas bond has been filed, the trial court may properly permit a special master to proceed with a hearing, over the objection that it is without jurisdiction because of an appeal from a prior order,[91] it cannot, after an appeal or writ of error has been taken or sued out and perfected, vacate or open the judgment or order which is the subject of the appellate proceeding,[92] nor can it take such action as will be, in effect, an execution of its judgment, or will destroy the subject of the appeal, or place the funds involved where they will be beyond the control of the ultimate judgment or decree.[93]

(5) Record and Proceedings Not of Record

The record on appeal must comply with applicable requirements in force at the time; it must, to permit a review of a particular question, contain such matters pertaining thereto as will enable the reviewing court to determine whether there is error in respect thereof; and, to be of aid to appellant, it must support and bear out his contentions.

Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rules 73 (g), 75, 76, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, relating to the record on appeal, including such matters as a designation by appellant, and a counter-designation by appellee, of the matters to be contained in the record, the right of appellee to require the substitution of question and answer form for narrative form of the testimony of witnesses, the time, and extension thereof, for filing the record, and the connection of the record, are given effect when applicable, that is, on appeals from the district court to the court of appeals in actions commenced after the effective date of the rules, or in actions then pending and not excluded by the court from the application of the rules.[94] Prior to the effective date of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, it was decided that affidavits, being in the nature of evidence, are not part of the record proper;[95] the opinion of the court is not a part of the record proper;[96] a bill of exceptions preserving the evidence is necessary to review the disallowance of items in an administrator's final account;[97] where appellant or plaintiff in error fails to make a bill of exceptions, case, or statement of facts, prepared and settled as required by law, the order, judgment, or decree appealed from should be affirmed, or his appeal or writ of error dismissed;[98] the failure of the trial judge to certify that the bill of exceptions contains all the evidence in the case may not, under the circumstances, render the bill insufficient;[99] if the statute or rule of court limits the extension of time which may be granted for the settlement and filing of a bill of exceptions, an order ordinarily cannot be granted giving a longer time;[1] after the expiration of the first extension, the court has no power again to extend the time for filing, settling, and signing the bill;[2] the court cannot, after the expiration of the term, correct the record nunc pro tunc as to the time of filing of the bill of exceptions, unless there is some written memorial to which the record will be made to conform by such correction;[3] the reviewing court will rely on the record, or on the bill of exceptions as settled by the trial court, and not disturb or correct it on affidavits;[4] a district court rule, relating to the time for submission of a statement of evidence in equity for settlement and striking a statement not timely submitted for settlement, must, to be effective, be consistent with, and not contrary to, a controlling equity rule;[5] and that the court is constrained to sustain a motion to dismiss the appeal where a requirement as to the time of filing the transcript is not complied with.[6] On appeal from the municipal court, the court of appeals must accept the transcript of record as it comes to the court where there are no inconsistencies within the transcript, no apparent inadequacy of the transcript, no clerical or ministerial mistakes, and no charge of deliberate falsification.[7]

Liberal construction to relieve against undue hardship

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure governing preparation of the record on appeal should be liberally construed so as to promote justice and relieve against undue hardship. The letter of the rules should be followed, except where undue hardship would result, and in such cases the rules should be flexible rather than rigid.—Hall v. Gordon, 119 F.2d 453, 74 App.D.C. 24.

The court of appeals confines itself to the facts disclosed by the record on appeal and the inferences legitimately deducible therefrom; it does not consider matters outside the record[8] or questions dependent on matters not shown by the record;[9] and it does not uphold contentions not sustained or supported by the record.[10] Questions relating to, or dependent on, evidence offered or introduced can-

Where record was not filed in time, because order extending time for filing was not itself made before expiration of period originally prescribed, the error was not necessarily fatal, and court in its discretion would not dismiss appeal, the rules involved being new and there being a difference in opinion on the point. Nevertheless, the court deemed it timely to advise the bar of its intent to exercise sparingly its discretion to save an appeal prosecuted in disregard of rules of procedure.—Burke v. Addition to record on appeal not be considered or reviewed where such evidence is not shown by the record or bill of exceptions;[11] and an assignment of error challenging the charge cannot be considered in the absence from the record of the charge[12] or exceptions thereto.[13] Indeed, where the omissions in the record are such that nothing is presented for appellate review, as is sometimes the case,[14] the appeal will be dismissed[15] or the judgment will be affirmed.[16] On the other hand, failure to incorporate the testimony in the record on appeal may not warrant affirmance in view of the pleadings and findings in the particular case;[17] and matters which are not necessary to a clear understanding of the case should not be included in the record.[18] A statement in the appeal record that a party has consented to the decree is equivalent to an admission that facts exist on which the decree rests, and the only question open is whether the decree could be entered on any state of facts.[19]

(6) Assignment of Errors or Equivalent Thereof

While rules relating to a presentation of errors by assignment or otherwise should be complied with, they are not so rigid as to make a full and perfect compliance therewith an absolute condition precedent to consideration of questions otherwise reviewable.

In accordance with its rule, the court of appeals ordinarily will disregard points not presented for its consideration in appellant's brief, argument, statement of points to be relied on on the appeal, or otherwise.[20] A rule of court in force at the time relating to assignments of error should be complied with,[21] and the reviewing court need not consider questions not raised by any of the assignments of error,[22] but it may, at its option, consider plain errors not assigned or not properly or fully assigned.[23] While an assignment of errors may and should be filed within the time prescribed by a rule of court in force at the time,[24] the fact that it is not filed within such time does not render it subject to a motion to strike from the record.[25] Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 75, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, relating to the record on appeal to a circuit court of appeals, does not contain any general provision corresponding to the court rule requiring the filing of an assignment of errors in the lower court and the inclusion thereof in the transcript of the record; but it does provide that

Definiteness

(1) The assignments of error should be definite.—Bernhardt v. City & S. Ry. Co., 263 F. 1009, 49 App.D.C. 265.

(2) An assignment of error to a refusal of the court to strike out testimony need not be considered where the ground of objection is not stated.—District of Columbia v. White, 48 App.D.C. 44.

Matter otherwise appearing

Although an assignment of error is not so specific as it might be, or as the rule contemplates, the appeal may be considered on its merits where the view of the trial judge sufficiently appears from his memorandum opinion and his order, as brought up by the record.—Cattell v. Jefferson, 51 F.2d 317, 60 App.D.C. 261.

24. D.C.—Nunan v. Timberlake, 85 F.2d 407, 66 App.D.C. 150.

if appellant does not designate for inclusion in the record on appeal the complete record and all the proceedings and evidence in the action, he shall serve with his designation a concise statement of the points on which he intends to rely on the appeal.[26]

(7) Briefs

A brief should be filed within the required time or an extension of time should be applied for. It should not contain abusive or other improper language or charges of misconduct unsupported by the record.

An appeal may, under a rule of court, be dismissed for failure to file a brief within the time specified;[27] and where counsel finds that he is prevented from having his brief printed or properly prepared for timely filing, he should apply at once to the court for an extension of time.[28]

Where a brief contains scandalous, libelous, abusive, or disrespectful language, or charges of misconduct unsupported by the record, it,[29] or the objectionable matter therein,[30] may be stricken on motion; but the granting of the motion is not intended to approve or excuse the alleged conduct referred to in the brief.[31] Citations of applicable law in the briefs are helpful, but may be omitted with less danger to a correct determination of the case than absence from the record of material facts on which the case must turn.[32]

(8) Dismissal, Advancement, or Rehearing

The practice and principles which govern the making and disposition of an application for dismissal of the appeal, or for advancement of the cause, or for a rehearing are substantially the same as those which obtain and are applied in appellate courts generally.

An appeal cannot be dismissed except on leave of court;[33] and in a doubtful case the appeal will be maintained.[34] It may be dismissed on a proper ground,[35] as where the appeal is taken from a nonappealable judgment, order, or decree, or a final judgment is lacking,[36] or where the appeal presents only a moot question.[37]

Advancement of cause. The court may, on a showing that public policy requires the advancement of the cause, grant a request for an immediate disposition of the appeal in order that the question involved therein, which is of great public interest, may be presented to the United States supreme court in time to be heard with another case involving the same question.[38]

26. Sufficient designation

Where five actions arising out of same accident were consolidated for trial, designation comprising complete record of all proceedings and evidence in portion of action from which appeal was taken was a sufficient designation for purposes of rule requiring a statement of points to be served only if appellant does not designate for inclusion the complete record and all proceedings and evidence in the action.—Atlantic Greyhound Lines v. Keesee, 111 F.2d 657, 72 App.D.C. 45.

Dismissal for failure to file statement of points

Failure to file a statement of points to be relied on, if appellant does not designate for inclusion the complete record of all proceedings and evidence in the action, is not mandatory ground for dismissing appeal.—Atlantic Greyhound Lines v. Keesee, supra.

Rehearing. An application for a rehearing should set forth fully and concisely the grounds on which it is based, and point out specifically in what respect the original decision is erroneous.[39] The court may amend its opinion on a motion for a rehearing.[40]

(9) Scope and Extent of Review

- (a) In general
- (b) Parties entitled to allege error; waiver or estoppel
- (c) Presumptions
- (d) Discretion of lower court
- (e) Questions of fact; verdicts and findings
- (f) Harmless or prejudicial error

(a) In General

General principles are applied by the court of appeals in determining the scope and extent of appellate review.

The scope of inquiry on appeal is not broader than that permissible in the lower court.[41] Ordinarily questions not directly involved in an appeal, or not necessary or relevant to, or material in, the final determination of the cause, will not be considered or decided by the court of appeals.[42] However, where a judgment granting an injunction in a case involving a labor dispute is required to be reversed because of lack of jurisdiction, but the case was fully tried on other issues which will necessarily arise again in the event of a new trial, the court may decline to limit its opinion to the jurisdictional question.[43]

A correct judgment or order will not be reversed or set aside because the trial court based it on insufficient or erroneous grounds or assigned incorrect or erroneous reasons therefor;[44] if the decision, conclusion, or result is correct it is immaterial what grounds it was placed on or what reasons were assigned therefor;[45] and where the trial court stated no reason for its decision the judgment will be affirmed if the record reveals any ground therefor.[46] However, where appellee submitted his case and obtained a verdict on one theory, he will not be permitted, for the purpose of sustaining the judgment, to adopt on appeal a different theory which appellant was not required to meet in the lower court.[47] Where no reasons were assigned for the dismissal of a bill on motion, the reviewing court must consider the bill and motion as filed.[48] An order or decree sustaining a demurrer will be affirmed if any one ground of demurrer is well taken;[49] and a correct ruling on the demurrer will be upheld, although it is based on an erroneous reason.[50]

Another statement is that questions or objections need not be considered where the result would be the same however they were decided, or where the decision on a different matter is decisive of the case.—Acker v. H. Herfurth, Jr., Inc., 110 F.2d 241, 71 App.D.C. 241.

Where appellant has received benefit of jurisdiction, his contention that a statute is unconstitutional because denying him jurisdiction to which he is entitled need not be considered.—Lowry v. McCarl, 79 F.2d 144, 65 App.D.C. 19, certiorari denied 56 S.Ct. 170, 296 U.S. 637, 80 L.Ed. 453.

Particular issues

Where defendants' motions for a directed verdict and to set aside judgment for plaintiff in malicious prosecution action were founded on view that evidence was insufficient to sustain action for want of showing that judicial proceedings had been instituted, and that was the principal ground urged for reversal of judgment, the issues of malice and want of probable cause were not properly before the reviewing court.—Melvin v. 50. D.C.—Wilkins v. McGuire, 2 App.D.C. 448.

Questions of law are reviewable on appeal;[51] and in an equitable suit or proceeding questions of fact are also subject to review.[52] However, the questions raised and determinable on a special appeal may be limited.[53] Also, where the case was tried to the court without a jury, issues or assignments of error as to which no findings of fact or conclusions of law were requested or made will not be considered on review.[54] A special finding within this rule is not a mere report of the evidence, but is a finding of those ultimate facts on which the law must determine the rights of the parties.[55] However, the purpose of the findings contemplated under Equity Rules, rule 70½, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723, is to enable the court of appeals to ascertain the basis of the determinations below and, when the questions presented may be readily understood, precise findings are not absolutely essential.[56] A case submitted on an agreed statement of facts must be determined in the light of such statement.[57]

Matters or evidence considered. The reviewing court will consider matters not offered or introduced in evidence in the lower court where the lower court was bound to take judicial notice of such matters;[58] and, on appeal from a judgment entered on demurrer in an action based on false certification of notes, it must look to the notes rather than the pleading where the terms and conditions of the notes are misstated in the declaration.[59] Matters which could not properly be considered by the trial court will not be considered by the court of appeals.[60]

Review of prior interlocutory order. On a writ of error from the final judgment of the municipal court, the court of appeals may consider a prior interlocutory order which could not be reviewed on a direct writ of error therefrom, such as an order vacating a judgment or order of dismissal and reinstating the case on the docket.[61]

Amendment of pleading on appeal. The insufficiency of a declaration can be cured by an amendment on appeal where the statement of a new cause of action is not involved.[62]

On a second or subsequent appeal or writ of error, the court will not consider matters assigned as error which arose prior to the first appeal or writ of error, and which might have been raised thereon, but were not, nor matters appearing in the original record which might have been corrected on the first hearing, but were not urged.[63]

Contribution between tort-feasors

There is not, and since the decision in Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, N.Y., 58 S.Ct. 817, 304 U.S. 64, 82 L.Ed. 1188, 114 A.L.R. 1487, conformed to, C.C.A., Tompkins v. Erie R. 53. On special appeal from temporary injunction, only question of jurisdiction will be determined.—Federal Trade Commission v. Millers' Nat. Federation, 23 F.2d 968, 57 App.D.C. 360.

On special appeal from order allowing additional exceptions to auditor's report, the question whether those exceptions were responsive to the pleadings was a matter not passed on in the court below, and therefore not raised by the special appeal.—Eichberg v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, 285 F. 928, 52 App.D.C. 194.

On appeal from order refusing to dismiss complaint in libel and slander suit against United States marshal on ground that any statements made by him were privileged, questions as to whether statements complained of were made concerning complainants or whether they were defamatory would not be considered, since motion to dismiss raised only the question of privileged statements.—Colpoys v. (b) Parties Entitled to Allege Error; Waiver or Estoppel

To be entitled to assert error in respect of a particular matter, a party must be aggrieved thereby and must not have waived, or become estopped to assert, it.

An appeal from an order will not be heard by the court of appeals as a special appeal on the request of appellee, who is not aggrieved by the order, where appellant does not join in the request.[64]

Appellant is estopped on appeal to make a claim inconsistent with the claim made or position taken by him on the trial[65] or with the theory on which the case was tried.[66] He may not complain of action taken with his consent[67] or on his request,[68] as where he requested that a certain question be submitted to the jury or that a charge thereon be given, he being precluded, in such case, from claiming on appeal that, on account of the insufficiency of the evidence or otherwise, the question should not have been submitted or the charge should not have been given.[69] Also, where he went to trial on the issues raised by the pleadings, he may not on appeal challenge the form or sufficiency of his adversary's pleading,[70] especially where the case was submitted entirely on his own theory.[71]

An assignment of error will ordinarily be regarded as waived or abandoned and no consideration will be given it, where it is not properly presented by brief.[72]

(c) Presumptions

The presumptions usually indulged on appellate review are, when appropriate, given effect by the court of appeals.

In the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, regularity of procedure in the lower court is presumed or implied in the appellate court.[73] It will be presumed that the trial was conducted in a proper, regular, and orderly manner,[74] and that the jury followed the instructions of the trial judge and were governed thereby in formulating the verdict.[75] On appeal the presumption is in favor of an order of confirmation of a judicial sale.[76]

64. D.C.—Dieterich v. Dieterich, 45 App.D.C. 356.

65. Disclaimer on trial

Where one of the parties disclaimed at the trial any intention of attacking the good faith of the other party, claiming that the question of good faith was immaterial to the issue, he is estopped on an appeal to claim that such other party acted in bad faith and conspired with others to deprive him of his property.—Staples v. Port Graham Coal Co., 46 App.D.C. 542.

Objection withdrawn in trial court may not be urged on appeal.—Pillow v. Shields, 46 App.D.C. 487.

Introduction of other evidence pertaining to same matter

In an action by a servant for injuries received when she fell down a dumb-waiter shaft, defendant cannot complain of introduction in evidence of photographs of the opening into the dumb-waiter on the third floor, where both parties introduced evidence concerning the opening.—Gibson v. Gernat, 267 F. 305, 50 App.D.C. 3, certiorari denied 40 S.Ct. 463, 253 U.S. 487, 64 L.Ed. 1026.

Granting one, and refusing other, inconsistent motions

Where defendant filed four alternative and inconsistent motions and the first motion was rightly overruled, defendant could not complain that its second motion was granted and the others refused.—Eichberg v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, 285 F. 928, 52 App.D.C. 194.

Related instruction

Defendant, requesting an instruction that if decedent when killed was crossing the tracks at a point other than the cinder walk he was not a passenger, is estopped to claim that the court erred in charging that if he was on the walk he was a passenger.—Washington Ry. & Electric Co. v. Clark, 48 App.D.C. 55.

75. D.C.—Hammond v. Sully, 48 App.D.C. 320.

Contrary not assumed

Where counsel withdrew a remark and the court instructed the jury to disregard the statement, it cannot be assumed that the jury took no heed of the withdrawal and disobeyed the positive mandate of the court.—Washington & O. D. Ry. Co. v. Dulany, 288 F. 421, 53 App.D.C. 67.

76. D.C.—Parsons v. Little, 28 App.D.C. 218.

77. U.S.—Weiss v. District Title Ins. Co., App.D.C., 121 F.2d 900.

Presumption of supporting facts

On a partial or incomplete record, the appellate court will presume any conceivable state of facts within the scope of the pleadings and not inconsistent with the record which will sustain and support the ruling or decision complained parts of the record which were not considered by the trial court, could not have influenced its decision, and which, if present, would not have been necessary to be considered to determine the correctness of the decision; and, where the record fails to show that anything omitted from the transcript or bill of exceptions was considered by the trial court, or was before it to be considered, the appellate court will not presume the judgment to be correct, because certain orders in the case, or the records of prior suits pleaded, but not introduced in evidence, are omitted from the transcript.[78] Where the instructions given by the court are not properly presented to the appellate court, it must be presumed that proper and full instructions were given.[79]

Truth of allegations. In reviewing the ruling or decision of the trial court on a demurrer[80] or on a motion to dismiss,[81] the appellate court will assume the truth of the well pleaded allegations in the pleading attacked, and that they could be established by proof. Also, in order to sustain a judgment for defendant, the court of appeals may presume the truth of defendant's allegations.[82]

Evidence and findings or other determination of facts. The reviewing court may, under some circumstances, indulge a presumption that questions of fact were passed on by the trial court.[83] In an equitable proceeding, it will be presumed that the trial justice considered only competent evidence.[84]

The general presumption, on appeal, is in favor of the findings made by the lower court,[85] especially where the trial judge heard the witnesses testify;[86] and, where the record does not contain express findings of all material facts involved in the case, it will be presumed, on appeal, that the lower court found, in favor of the prevailing party, all the facts necessary for the support of the judgment.[87] The evidence adduced must be considered in the light most favorable to the prevailing party,[88] except where a verdict was directed for defendant, in which case the appellate court will view the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff and give him the benefit of all favorable inferences arising therefrom.[89] Ordinarily, where the evidence is not before the appellate court, it will be assumed to support and justify the findings[90] and decree;[91] but this presumption as to the suf-of.—Carle v. Rainey, 83 F.2d 600, 65 App.D.C. 343.

Validity of will

In determining right of testatrix' heirs and next of kin, instead of executor, to maintain suit to avoid deed on ground of undue influence, court of appeals could not presume that unproved will, whereby testatrix directed executor to sell real property and distribute proceeds, was invalid.—Kashouty v. Deep, App.D.C., 126 F.2d 233.

ficiency of the evidence to support a finding is not available to prop up the contentions of the appealing party where, although one of the findings was in his favor, the decree was against him.[92]

(d) Discretion of Lower Court

Usually the determination or ruling of the trial court in respect of a matter within its discretion will not be reviewed or disturbed by the court of appeals except for a clear abuse of discretion.

As a general rule, if there has not been a clear abuse of discretion resulting to the complaining party's prejudice, the appellate court will not review or revise the trial court's action or rulings with reference to matters resting in the latter's judicial discretion.[93] The rule is applicable to the trial court's determination of discretionary matters in garnishment proceedings,[94] as well as to its discretionary action or rulings in respect of amendments,[95] leave to file a supplemental bill[96] or bill of review,[97] continuances,[98] injunctions,[99] the right to open and close,[1] the exclusion of evidence offered by plaintiff after he has closed his case in chief and defendant has moved for a directed verdict,[2] cross-examination beyond the scope of the direct examination,[3] or setting aside a decree pro confesso.[4] Also, in a number of cases, the rule is deemed to be applicable to the grant or refusal of a new trial generally[5] or to the ruling on a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence.[6] In some cases, however, the ruling is considered reviewable for, and only for, error of law[7] and not at all where it is discretionary.[8] It is even stated that the action of the trial court in refusing to grant a new trial is not assignable as error.[9] The ruling is not reviewable in so far as it relates to a ground of the motion that the damages awarded by the verdict are inadequate or excessive.[10]

A determination by the trial court as to the qualification of a witness to testify as an expert or to express an opinion as a nonexpert ordinarily will not be disturbed by the court of appeals[11] unless manifest error has been committed.[12] Discretionary orders in respect of costs usually are not re-

Departure from established rules

The court of appeals has jurisdiction to inquire on appeal whether the lower court exercised its discretion in accordance with established rules and precedents; and, when it appears that there has been a departure from such rules and precedents, the appellate court will not hesitate to act.—American E. Absence of gross abuse of discretion

In a case where the verdict was not such as to present the question of a gross abuse of discretion, the court said that refusal to set aside a verdict as excessive on motion for a new trial will not be reviewed on appeal, but deemed it unnecessary to decide what it might do in case of a gross abuse of discretion.—Washington Ry. & Electric Co. v. (e) Questions of Fact; Verdicts and Findings

A verdict, finding, or other determination of fact will not be disturbed or set aside on appeal where it is supported by substantial evidence and is not clearly erroneous.

In an action at law a determination of a question of fact in the lower court will not be disturbed on appeal where it is supported by the evidence.[14] Where both parties move for a directed verdict, they thereby assume the facts to be undisputed and in effect submit to the trial judge the determination of the inferences proper to be drawn therefrom, and on review his finding, decision, or determination must stand if the record discloses any substantial evidence to support it.[15] The overruling of a motion for a new trial on the ground that the finding or verdict is contrary to the evidence, or is not sustained by sufficient evidence, is not assignable as error.[16]

Verdict or findings of jury. The verdict or findings of the jury will not be disturbed, or will be taken as conclusive, where there is ample evidence to support the verdict or findings[17] or where no verdict could have been rendered which would not have ignored important, convincing, and crucial evidence given by honest and honorable witnesses.[18] In determining whether the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict, the function of the court of appeals is not to weigh the evidence factually as the jury does, but to decide whether plaintiff's case, as made, was strong enough for the court to allow the jury to consider it.[19] The verdict or finding is conclusive as to a particular issue or question of fact which was properly submitted to the jury.[20] The question whether there was evidence for the jury on any particular issue must be determined by the reviewing tribunal according to its best judgment on the particular record involved;[21] and each case must rest largely on its own facts.[22]

A verdict approved by the trial court will not be disturbed;[23] and a judgment based on a corrected verdict will not be reversed on the ground that the defect in the verdict, which included a few extra days' interest, was corrected by remittitur to conform to the evidence.[24]

Findings of court generally. The trial court's fact findings will never be lightly disturbed by the appellate court;[25] and they will not be disturbed at all where the reviewing court finds no reason to do so.[26] If they have proper evidentiary support and are free from legal error, the trial court's fact findings will be regarded by the appellate court as conclusive and binding, and as establishing with finality that the facts are in truth as found.[27] Ordinarily the findings will not be disturbed if they are not clearly, plainly, palpably, or manifestly wrong or erroneous;[28] and, a fortiori, they will not be disturbed where the court of appeals is not only unable to say that they are clearly erroneous, but is of the opinion that they are amply supported by the evidence.[29] The findings of fact are to be regarded as adequately supported and left undisturbed if they are sustained by substantial evidence,[30] the

the inquiry whether, without considering and weighing conflicting testimony, there is some substantial evidence to support the findings.[31] Findings of fact based on conflicting evidence are regarded as binding and conclusive on the appellate court and not to be disturbed,[32] at least where they have sufficient support in competent believable evidence,[33] and are not clearly or plainly wrong or erroneous.[34] While error, which will result in reversal, exists if the fact findings or conclusions are contrary to the evidence which is all one way and is not immaterial, irrelevant, improbable, inconsistent, contradicted, or discredited,[35] the mere fact that the findings may appear to the appellate court to be against the weight or preponderance of the evidence will not cause them to be disturbed if they are not clearly, manifestly, or palpably against the great weight of the evidence.[36]

A judgment attacked on the ground that the findings of fact do not comply with Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 52, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, may stand if the appellate court is afforded a clear understanding of the basis of the decision.[37] Prior to the effective date of such rule, it was held that, in the absence of special findings, a general finding was conclusive on all matters of fact.[38]

Findings in equitable suit. While the court of findings of fact,[39] it will not disturb them on appeal unless, on examination of the evidence, it deems them clearly wrong.[40] It accords particular deference and weight to, and seldom interferes with, the lower court's findings in an equitable suit where the evidence is oral and conflicting;[41] and it may uphold a finding even though there is conflicting evidence which would have justified a finding the other way.[42]

Findings of auditor or special master. While it is true that the court of appeals will sustain the findings of an auditor or special master unless it is shown that there has been an error in law or a conclusion of fact unwarranted by the evidence,[43] it will not hesitate to set aside such findings if they are clearly in conflict with the evidence.[44] When approved or concurred in by the trial court, the findings of the auditor or special master will not be disturbed or set aside except for an obvious and important error or mistake[45] in the application of the law or the consideration of the evidence.[46]

(f) Harmless or Prejudicial Error

The usual rules as to harmless and prejudicial error have been applied many times in cases coming before the court of appeals for review.

Appellant cannot complain of error which operated in his favor;[47] and a judgment will not be

Where plaintiff brought an action on an account for which defendant had given a note which had been lost by plaintiff, defendant cannot complain that the court, by analogy to the proceeding permitted by statute, in an action on a lost instrument, required a bond to indemnify defendant against liability on the lost note, even if that requirement was not authorized, since it was favorable to defendant.—Freeman v. These include defects or insufficiencies in respect of the pleadings;[49] misconduct of the court while conducting the trial;[50] improper remarks of counsel;[51] the fact that no verdict was returned by the jury;[52] and error or alleged error in granting or denying a motion for a bill of particulars,[53] permitting a supplemental pleading to be filed,[54] hearing evidence on a motion to dismiss a petition,[55] striking out affidavits supporting a motion for summary judgment,[56] refusing to sustain a challenge to a juror,[57] admitting[58] or excluding[59] or striking out[60] or refusing to strike out[61] evidence, giving[62]

(2) Also error, if any, in admitting extrajudicial statement was not prejudicial, where fact stated was conclusively established by evidence.—Wagar v. Stalcup, 73 F.2d 986, 64 App.D.C. 50.

(3) Any error in permitting one party to introduce only a portion of a deposition taken by his opponent becomes immaterial where the party taking the deposition subsequently introduces all of it.—New Arcade Co. v. Owens, 258 F. 965, 49 App.D.C. 65.

(4) The defect in a question is cured where it is supplied by the answer of the witness.—U. S. v. Woltman, 57 F.2d 418, 61 App.D.C. 52.

(5) Any error in admission of testimony on cross-examination of defendant called as plaintiff's witness, because directed to material matters not brought out on direct examination, was cured by action of defendant's counsel in accepting her as his own witness.—Lemon v. Martin, 3 F.2d 710, 55 App.D.C. 186.

(6) Error in the admission of evidence is harmless where the court, in accordance with the competent evidence in the case, directs a verdict on the count or issue on which the improper evidence is admitted.—Washington & O. D. Ry. Co. v. Dulany, 53 App.D.C. 67, 288 F. 421.

Where same evidence was subsequently admitted, the exclusion was not prejudicial error.—Economon v. Barry-Pate Motor Co., 3 F.2d 84, 55 App.D.C. 143—Rogers v. Rawlings, 298 F. 683, 54 App.D.C. 361.

Where other evidence establishes fact sought to be shown by the excluded evidence, the error is cured.—Pollock v. Jameson, 70 F.2d 756, 63 App.D.C. 152.

Finding of fact
The exclusion of evidence is harmless error where the court or jury find as a fact the matter which such evidence would have tended to show.—Steger v. Cameron, 109 F.2d 347, 71 App.D.C. 202—Janes v. Janes, 278 F. 576, 51 App.D.C. 267.

or refusing to give[63] instructions, directing[64] or refusing to direct[65] a verdict on one of two counts or pleas, refusing to cite for contempt,[66] or in denying a right to supersedeas on appeal from an order.[67] Statements made in the presence of the jury were not prejudicial to plaintiff where a verdict was directed for defendant;[68] and a reference in the opinion of the court to the answer of a defendant who did not appeal is not ground for reversal where the answer of the defendant who did appeal justifies the decree.[69]

However, the court will refuse to reverse for error only when it is certain that the error could not have prejudiced the complaining party;[70] the error will be presumed to be injurious where it is not shown that it did not or could not prejudice the party against whom it was committed.[71] The court of appeals will reverse for errors in respect of parties which materially affected the rights of appellant;[72] error in the admission of evidence which apparently affected the jury in their verdict;[73] the improper exclusion of material testimony offered in explanation or rebuttal;[74] error in not allowing defendant to lay an adequate foundation for admission of secondary evidence of a signed statement constituting an admission;[75] submission of the case on erroneous instructions which operated to the prejudice of the complaining party;[76] and failure of the trial court to comply with a rule of court requiring it to disregard, at every stage of the proceeding, any error or defect in the proceeding which does not affect the substantial rights of a party.[77] Error in admitting incompetent evidence is not cured by giving an instruction which is not responsive to the evidence.[78]

(10) Determination and Disposition of Cause

Such general principles as are applicable to the particular case are controlling in determining whether the judgment is to be affirmed, modified, or reversed and what, if any, further proceedings in the cause are to be ordered or permitted.

While the court of appeals has jurisdiction, as shown infra this section and as expressly provided by statute, to affirm, reverse, or modify a judgment of the municipal court or of the district, formerly supreme, court properly brought before it for review, its jurisdiction to review one judgment does not give it power to reverse or modify another and independent judgment.[79] Its duty is to give judgment after an examination of the entire record,[80] without regard to technical errors or defects not affecting the substantial rights of the parties.[81]

Affirmance. The judgment appealed from will be affirmed in a proper case,[82] as where appellant has failed to demonstrate error or to overcome a presumption of correctness[83] or the questions in-

Explanation to jury by counsel

Where defendant's requested instruction on burden of proof was properly refused because it did not correctly state the law, but defendant's counsel was permitted to, and did, explain to the jury what the plaintiffs' burden was, verdict for plaintiffs would not be disturbed.—McWilliams v. Improper question

In a personal injury action, a question concerning a person's drinking habits over a twelve months' period should not have been asked, but it would be going too far to say that it constituted reversible error, especially when it was coupled with an inquiry regarding drinking at the time of the injury.—Radio Cab v. volved have become moot and no controversy remains.[84]

Modification. A judgment which is too broad may be modified by the reviewing court.[85]

Reversal generally. A reversal may be proper and necessary in the particular case.[86] A judgment will be reversed for failure to award nominal damages where it appears from the record that, on another trial, actual and substantial damages may be recovered.[87] A reversal does not control the interests of parties who did not join, or were not made parties to, the appeal.[88]

Remand for further proceedings. Where the condition of the cause or the record is such that the court of appeals cannot make a final disposition of the case or render judgment with safety to the rights of the parties, it will order, or grant permission for, a new trial or other proceedings in the lower court.[89] The nature and extent of the proceedings which will be ordered on a reversal and remand is a matter largely within the discretion of the appellate court.[90] Various steps and proceedings which, in particular cases, the court of appeals has deemed it proper to order, or grant permission for, include the entry of a particular judgment or decree,[91] the vacation of a decree,[92] dismissal of the proceeding,[93] quashing a writ of replevin and ordering a return of the property,[94] transfer to the probate court,[95] a new trial of one issue alone,[96] amendment of pleadings,[97] the taking of further evidence,[98] the making of findings

Conditional reversal

Where the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff for six thousand dollars assessing five thousand dollars as compensatory and one thousand dollars as punitive damages, and the court of appeals found that the lower court erred in permitting the jury to award punitive damages, the judgment was reversed, unless plaintiff should remit one thousand dollars.—A. Where joint verdict and judgment against two appellants is erroneous as to one of them, the judgment will be reversed and the case remanded, with directions to set aside such judgment and permit the appellee to elect to become nonsuit against the successful appellant, and take judgment on the verdict against the other appellant, and if appellee does not so elect, then to set aside the verdict and order a new trial generally.—J. Correction of statement of evidence

If statement of evidence which was not submitted to, or approved by, trial court, judicial approval being unnecessary under district court rule, did not reflect accurately evidence which was received, the matter was for attention, correction, and disposition of trial court in further proceedings.—Miller v. Miller, 114 F.2d 596, 72 App.D.C. 348.

Where trial court erroneously denies motion for directed verdict, presumably it is duty of United States court of appeals to reverse and remand with instructions to enter judgment for the moving party.—Pessagno v. Euclid Inv. Co., 112 F.2d 577, 72 App.D.C. 141, reversing, D.C., 25 F.Supp. 896.

New trial not desired by appellee

After a case has been reversed and remanded for new trial, a petition by appellee, plaintiff in the suit, stating it does not desire a new trial or to present new testimony, but is willing to stand on the record made, and prefers a decision directing the lower court to enter judgment against it, so that it may appeal to the supreme court without further delay, should be granted.—National League of Professional Baseball Clubs v. Federal Baseball Club of Baltimore, 269 F. 681, 50 App.D.C. 165, affirmed Federal Baseball Club of Baltimore v. National League of Professional Base Ball Clubs, 42 S.Ct. 465, 259 U.S. 200, 66 L.Ed. 898, 26 A.L.R. 357, leave to present petition for rehearing granted 42 S.Ct. 587, 66 L.Ed. 898.

Determination without prejudice

In suit by members of unincorporated association composed of men who owned and operated taxicabs to prevent suspension of their licenses because of nonpayment of judgment for injuries inflicted by one member, determination that theory that plaintiffs were not bound by the judgment because not properly before court rendering judgment could not be considered because not raised in district court was made without prejudice to right of district court, if it deemed that justice so required, to permit plaintiffs to amend their complaint.—Champ v. Atkins, App.D.C., 128 F.2d 601.

of fact,[99] and reinstatement of a verdict and passing on an alternative motion for a new trial.[1] However, the court, on reversing a decree dismissing a bill on a motion in the nature of a demurrer to the pleading, should not direct a final decree;[2] and the equitable power of remanding with instructions to grant leave to amend the bill by adding a necessary party defendant will not be exercised in a case involving a public contract, work under which has, before the decision on appeal, progressed to the extent that large public interests are involved, where complainant's attention was previously called to the defect of parties and he made no offer to amend.[3] A reversal and remand are not made necessary by a change of law which preserves pending appeals and decision thereof in accordance with previous law.[4]

Mandate and subsequent proceedings. A mandate granting restitution of property obtained under an erroneous judgment should not dispose of deposits in court.[5] While a mandate may be recalled and amended,[6] a particular amendment may be unwarranted,[7] and, where it is obvious that only one act remains to be done, a motion to recall the mandate for amendment on the ground that there exists misapprehension as to its scope will be denied.[8]

In subsequent proceedings in the lower court, the mandate, as properly interpreted,[9] should be complied with,[10] and the decision on appeal should be followed, it being the law of the case.[11] While, on the vacation of a judgment and the granting of a new trial under the mandate, the case stands as originally, the former trial and all that occurred in connection therewith being a nullity,[12] nevertheless, where the court of appeals held on appeal that the evidence made a question for the jury, the lower court, on a new trial, is required, on substantially the same evidence, to submit the case to the jury.[13]

Where a motion for judgment on the mandate was overruled on submission to a district judge while presiding in the motions division, a motion for rehearing on the motion for judgment is properly before the same judge, notwithstanding the termination of his assignment to the motions division.[14]

§ 325. District Court of United States

The district court, formerly the supreme court, possesses both local and federal jurisdiction. Its local jurisdiction is original and general.

The supreme court of the District of Columbia was established in 1863 by 12 St. at L. p 762 c 91. It superseded, and succeeded to the jurisdiction of the circuit court of the District which was established in 1801 by 2 St. at L. pp 103,

Rule without application

Where husband obtained a divorce a vinculo matrimonii in Virginia after having been granted a divorce a mensa et thoro by the district court of the United States for the District of Columbia which also awarded alimony to wife, district court was sustained on appeal in denying husband's petition to set aside or modify its order, new petition for reduction of alimony was denied under the law of the case rule, the court of appeals on appeal held that the Virginia decree was not entitled to full faith and credit in the District of Columbia because of lack of jurisdiction of Virginia court, and the supreme court on certiorari held that Virginia court had jurisdiction and that its decree was enforceable in the District of Columbia, the law of the case rule had no application, and the district court was required on remand to vacate its original order and to relieve husband from making further alimony payments.—Davis v. Davis, 114 F.2d 492, 72 App.D.C. 341.

To prevent application of rule there must be a clear case showing that earlier adjudication was plainly wrong and that manifest injustice would be worked.—Brown v. Its name was changed to the district court of the United States for the District of Columbia by a statute, Act of June 25, 1936, 49 St. at L. p 1921 c 804, which provided, however, that nothing contained therein should affect the jurisdiction or functions of the court. It is a single court of general jurisdiction[15] and the court of general original jurisdiction within the District,[16] occupying the same relation to the District of Columbia that a state court of similar jurisdiction does to a state.[17] In addition to such general original jurisdiction within the District, it possesses the same powers and jurisdiction as the district courts of the United States and such further special jurisdiction as is conferred on it by congress.[18] It is a district court of the United States within the meaning of some,[19] but not other,[20] federal statutes. As required by statute, it holds a general[21] and special[22] terms; but in so far as it embraced matters of appellate jurisdiction, the general term was superseded by the statutes substituting the court of appeals therefor.[23] The special terms are known respectively as the circuit court,[24] the equity court,[25] and the criminal court,[26] and, likewise, a special term known as the Formerly the powers of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in patent cases were the same as those of circuit courts of the United States.—Cochrane v. Deener, D.C., 94 U.S. 780, 24 L.Ed. 139.

Exclusive jurisdiction

The district court for District of Columbia has exclusive jurisdiction of suits against an executor on claims against the estate, but an attachment or garnishment directed to an executor, in connection with an action against a third party who claims an interest in the estate, is not such a suit.—Frank v. Malone, App.D.C., 126 F.2d 651.

Concurrent jurisdiction

Under 38 U.S.C.A. § 445, the district court of the United States for the District of Columbia has original jurisdiction to hear and determine action by national bank as conservator of incompetent to recover monthly and total disability benefits under converted war risk policy; and it is unimportant that such jurisdiction is concurrent with that conferred on district court of United States in district where veteran resides.—First Nat. Decisions under former appellate jurisdiction

(1) From the final decision of one of the justices of the supreme court at chambers, on the hearing and determination of habeas corpus discharging the prisoner, an appeal might be taken to the general term at the instance of the attorney general of the United States.—Matter of Taylor, 10 D.C. 426.

(2) On appeal from a judgment of the municipal court, it was necessary to comply with requirements relating to an appeal bond and approval thereof.—Monahan v. Murray, 269 F. 476, 50 App.D.C. 134.

(3) A notice stating that one of two persons whose names and addresses were given would be offered as surety, sufficiently complied with the rule of practice requiring such notice to contain "the name and address of the proposed surety."—Liebman v. Fromm, 47 App.D.C. 540.

(4) A landlord could not in the supreme court on appeal from the municipal court in a proceeding to dispossess a tenant rely on a breach of the lease not alleged by him in his complaint in the municipal court. —Davis v. Taylor, 276 F. 619, 51 App. D.C. 97.

(5) If the municipal court had no jurisdiction in a case, the supreme court acquired none by an appeal. —Gray v. Ward, 45 App.D.C. 498.

(6) Where a case over which the municipal court and the supreme court had concurrent jurisdiction was brought from the former court into the latter by certiorari, it became a case pending in the latter court the same as though it had been originally instituted therein.—New Arcade Co. v. Owens, 258 F. 965, 49 App. D.C. 65—Bradford v. Brown, 22 App. D.C. 455.

(7) In such case a set-off might be asserted for the first time in the supreme court.—New Arcade Co. v. Owens, supra.

(8) Also, the supreme court might render judgment thereon for an amount in excess of the judisdiction of the municipal court.—New Arcade Co. v. Owens, supra.

(9) An appeal did not lie to the supreme court sitting in general term from an order of the circuit court vacating a judgment by default.—Meloy v. Grant, 15 D.C. 486.

(10) Findings of an auditor, concurred in by the lower court, were permitted to stand unless some obvious error had intervened in the application of the law or some serious or important mistake had been made in the consideration of the evidence.—York v. Tyler, 21 D.C. 265.

probate court,[27] and it also sat as the district court of the United States.[28]

In an equity case, the court has continuing jurisdiction to grant full and complete relief;[29] but the equity court is without jurisdiction of matters over which exclusive jurisdiction is conferred on the probate court;[30] and where the supreme or district court is exercising jurisdiction which is expressly limited by statute and is identical with that conferred on district courts of the United States, such as jurisdiction with reference to the action of a particular commission, its authority is not enlarged by its general equity jurisdiction.[31]

The probate court, or district court sitting in probate, although possessing exclusive jurisdiction over probate matters,[32] is a tribunal of limited powers and jurisdiction.[33] Generally speaking, it exercises the same powers as were conferred on the orphans' court of Maryland by the Act of 1798, together with such additional powers as have been conferred by congress since that time.[34] Although, in determining the jurisdiction and powers of the probate court, Maryland statutes and decisions of later date than 1801 are not to be regarded as constituting the law of the District,[35] such decisions are customarily looked to for assistance, not merely in interpreting the law which was inherited from that state, but also in interpreting later statutes of the District which are the same as, or closely similar to, those of Maryland.[36] The court is without jurisdiction to settle the ownership of property[37] as between the personal representative and a stranger who claims adversely to the estate;[38] but it does have jurisdiction to try the question of title presented where an executor asserts title to assets adversely to the estate.[39] It has statutory power to enforce its decrees in like manner as decrees may be enforced in the equity court;[40] and where it has personal jurisdiction over an individual in the main cause, its jurisdiction continues in that cause, and in a civil contempt proceeding, for the purpose of enforcing, and making effective, its original decree.[41]

Personal or territorial jurisdiction. A voluntary submission to the jurisdiction of the court by a person or corporation will be accorded effect;[42] and a fund is personal property within the meaning of a statute authorizing service by publication or personal service outside the District where defendant is a nonresident and the suit involves a claim or demand to or against real or personal property within the District;[43] but, except as otherwise provided by statute, and in the absence of personal service within the District or a voluntary submission to jurisdiction, the court is without jurisdiction where defendant is a nonresident and the action is in personam or the property, if any, involved is situated outside the District.[44] The Fifth Amendment to the federal Constitution does not, of itself, confer jurisdiction on the court to entertain an action against the sovereign.[45] The court has no jurisdiction over the custody and control of prisoners in the penitentiary at Atlanta, Georgia,[46] or over the action of the warden of such penitentiary in his conduct with counsel representing inmates.[47] Also, the court is without jurisdiction to investigate an illegal search and seizure outside the District and unconnected with any case pending in the court.[48] In a divorce proceeding, the court exercises local and not federal jurisdiction.[49]

Writs and procedure. The practice and procedure in the district court, formerly the supreme court, is prescribed in part by statutes, in part by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, and in part by rules of such court.[50] The court has statutory power to issue certain named writs and all other writs known in common law and equity practice that may be necessary to the effective exercise of its jurisdiction.[51] Also, it has authority to make rules of court,[52] provided they are not inconsistent with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, or, formerly, the Equity Rules,[53] which were binding on it.[54] Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rule 81 (d), 28 U.S. C.A. following § 723c, makes the rules applicable generally to the district court of the United States for the District of Columbia; but rule 81 a provides that they shall not apply to probate, adoption, or lunacy proceedings in such court; and while the district court, in the exercise of its own rule-making power, has, in respect of some matters, adopted the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for the probate court,[55] it has not done so to the extent of modifying a statute providing for certain procedure.[56] Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, rules 17 (b), 81 (e), 28 U.S.C.A. following § 723c, are construed together as not intended to change the preëxisting law of the District in reference to the capacity of partnerships and unincorporated associations to sue and be sued in the district court for the District of Columbia on local causes of action arising at common law.[57] Prior to the adoption of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a motion to set aside a default judgment for lack of service of process could be heard and determined on affidavits and counter-affidavits or on oral testimony.[58] There is early authority to the effect that a motion for a new trial, based on a bill of exceptions, is to be regarded as equivalent to a writ of error and the court will look only at the matter of law it contains.[59]

§ 326. Inferior Courts

The municipal court is the inferior court possessing civil jurisdiction in the District of Columbia. It was established, and its jurisdiction was defined, for the purpose of providing a tribunal for the speedy disposition of numerous cases in which title to realty is not involved and the amount claimed does not exceed one thousand dollars. The proceedings therein are simple and the pleadings need not be formal; but the judgments of the court are as immune from collateral impeachment and vacation after the term as are judgments of other courts.

The inferior courts of the District of Columbia are the municipal court,[60] which is the successor of the justices of the peace,[61] a police court,[62] and a juvenile court.[63]

Generally speaking, the municipal court has jurisdiction of civil cases wherein the debt or damages or the value of the personal property claimed does not exceed one thousand dollars;[64] but it is without jurisdiction of cases involving title to realty[65] and of cases within the exclusive jurisdiction of the supreme or district court.[66] While it is without jurisdiction of a direct action against an executor or administrator on a claim against the estate,[67] it has jurisdiction of attachment or garnishment proceedings involving one thousand dollars or less,[68] including an attachment or garnishment directed to an executor in connection with an action against a third party who claims an interest in the estate.[69] The purpose of the statute setting up the court and defining its jurisdiction is to provide a tribunal for the speedy disposition of a large number of small causes.[70] The proceedings in the court are intended to be simple and as free as possible from legal technicalities.[71] Under the municipal court rules, informality in pleading is permissible;[72] and after an action has been initiated, no further pleadings of any kind are required;[73] but where, in a certain kind of proceeding, a complaint is required by statute, there must be a written statement, however informal, of the grounds on which relief is asked.[74] The municipal court is without power to vacate its judgment after the expiration of the term in the absence of fraud or other recognized ground for vacation.[75] A judgment of such court is not subject to collateral impeachment where the court had jurisdiction of the cause of action and over the person of defendant and no fraud in the procurement of the judgment is alleged.[76] So, also, where the court had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter, a judgment of a corporation court of a city in a state on a judgment of the municipal court of the District is not open to collateral attack in a subsequent suit thereon in the municipal court of the District.[77] Former statutory provisions, since changed by amendment, relating to actions in the municipal court were construed in some cases.[78]

XV. COURT OF CLAIMS

A. HISTORY AND PURPOSE

§ 327. General Statement

The court of claims, originally only an administrative or advisory body, has, by statute, been converted into a court, and has been given jurisdiction over controversies which are susceptible of judicial cognizance; but it derives none of its powers from the judiciary article of the Constitution.

The court of claims was established in 1855 "for the triple purpose of relieving Congress and of protecting the government by regular investigation and of benefiting the claimants by affording them a certain mode of examining and adjudicating upon their claims."[79] Until the organization of the court the only recourse was in an appeal to congress.[80] The court of claims was originally nothing more than

Custody and maintenance of child

Where stipulation for support of infant child was made part of record in divorce proceeding in district court of United States for District of Columbia, the district court had continuing and exclusive jurisdiction over custody and maintenance of child and the municipal court did not have jurisdiction of action to recover amount alleged to be due under the stipulation.—Emrich v. McNeil, App.D.C., 126 F.2d 841.

67. D.C.—Sanford v. Sanford, 286 F. 777, 52 App.D.C. 315.

Primary purpose of rule of municipal court providing that no formal pleadings shall be required, even for initiation of Class B cases, is to assure people of small means, ignorant of complexities of pleading and practice and often unrepresented by counsel, their day in court and that fair hearing on merits which in our system of jurisprudence is regarded as fundamental.—Shields v. Hawkins, App.D.C., 125 F.2d 204.

77. D.C.—Edward Thompson Co. v. Thomas, 49 F.2d 500, 60 App.D.C. 118.

78. Security for costs

A former statutory provision that nonresidents should not commence a suit in the municipal court without first giving security for costs went to the jurisdiction of the court over the person of defendant, and he had a right to insist on it; but the right was a personal privilege which might be waived by him and was waived by pleading to the merits.—Boss v. Hagan, 261 F. 254, 49 App.D.C. 106, 8 A.L.R. 1508.

Pleading equitable defenses

Prior to an amendment making it expressly applicable to actions in the municipal court, a statute providing that in all actions at law equitable defenses may be interposed by plea or replication, was construed to apply only to actions in courts which already possessed jurisdiction over equitable causes, and did not enlarge the jurisdiction of the municipal court by giving it general equitable jurisdiction when dealing with defenses to actions.—International Exch. an administrative or advisory body, but by statute it has been converted into a court, in fact as well as name, and given jurisdiction over controversies which are susceptible of judicial cognizance.[81] The court of claims receives no authority and its judges no rights from the judicial article of the Constitution, but the court derives its being and its powers and the judges their rights from the acts of congress passed in pursuance of other and distinct constitutional provisions.[82]

B. JURISDICTION

The jurisdiction of the court of claims, which is purely statutory, extends throughout the United States.

The jurisdiction of the court of claims extends throughout the United States. The court issues writs to every portion of the United States, and is specially authorized to enforce them.[83] The jurisdiction of the court is purely statutory and cannot be extended to cases not provided for by statute,[84] and special jurisdictional acts are to be strictly construed and implications as to jurisdiction under their terms are forbidden.[85] Congress may with-

Power to pay debts

The court of claims is legislative, not constitutional, in character and function and its jurisdiction arises from the congressional power to pay the debts of the United States, which it is free to exercise through judicial agencies.—U. S., for Use of Mutual Metal Mfg. Co. v. Biggs, D.C.Ill., 46 F.Supp. 8.

Requirements not vesting judicial power

Requirement that court of claims in cases involving expropriation of property must award just compensation as provided by Fifth Amendment and decide set-offs and other claims made by government against petitioners does not vest in court of claims "judicial power" as defined in judicial article of Constitution.—Williams v. (5) To try suit for restoration of a discharged government employee to his former position, for the clearing of such an employee's record of false charges or stigma, or for loss of property by such an employee due to his inability to secure employment after dismissal from the government service.—Barry v. U. S., 83 Ct.Cl. 413.

Declaratory judgment act

Court of claims is not within declaratory judgment act of June 14, 1934.—Twin Cities Properties, Inc., Clayton, Mo., v. U. S., 81 Ct.Cl. 655.

Duties of military officers

Under a statute which provides "that during the continuance of the present war, warrant officers, petty officers and enlisted men of the United States coast guard shall receive the same rates of pay as are or may hereafter be prescribed for corresponding grades or ratings and length of service in the navy," the court has jurisdiction to determine to the duties of what warrant or petty officers in the navy the duties of warrant or petty officers in the coast guard correspond.—Allen v. U. S., 56 Ct.Cl. 265, affirmed U. S. v. Allen, 43 S.Ct. 369, 261 U.S. 317, 67 L.Ed. 675.

Gratuities cannot be recovered in court of claims, in absence of enabling act.—Osage Tribe of Indians v. U. S., 66 Ct.Cl. 64, appeal dismissed and certiorari denied Osage Nation of Indians v. U. S., 49 S.Ct. 251, 279 U.S. 811, 73 L.Ed. 971.

Indian cases brought before the court of claims do not rest on the theory that the government's responsibility is that of a guardian toward its ward.—Choctaw & Chickasaw Nations v. U. S., 75 Ct.Cl. 494.

Legislative purpose as expressed in a statute cannot be questioned.—Buchanan v. U. S., 78 Ct.Cl. 791.

Moral obligations

The court may not consider moral obligations or look beyond the terms of the act for seeming injustices.—Shearer v. U. S., 87 Ct.Cl. 40.

Necessity of providing remedy

Congress does not have to provide a remedy through its courts where it creates rights in individuals against itself; where a special remedy is provided in a statute creating a right, that special remedy is exclusive.—John B. Kelly, Inc., v. U. S., 87 Ct.Cl. 271.

Existence of remedy for injury occasioned by failure of the government to recognize a governmental duty is exclusively dependent on legislative discretion, and the courts may not intervene save by authority from congress.—McCalib v. U. S., 83 Ct.Cl. 79.

draw cases from the jurisdiction of the court of claims, but it cannot interfere with the proper exercise of its judicial functions.[86] The court can act only on vested rights,[87] and, generally, only on money demands.[88] It cannot take jurisdiction by consent of the parties where it is without jurisdiction of the subject matter.[89] Since all matters made cognizable by the court of claims are equally susceptible of legislative or executive determination, they are matters in respect of which there is no constitutional right to a judicial remedy.[90] While the court of claims has certain equity powers, its jurisdiction in that regard is limited.[91] The court of claims has no jurisdiction to interpret or construe the rules of the house of representatives of the United States.[92]

Amounts due United States. The Judicial Code § 180, 28 U.S.C.A. § 287, permits the adjudication, on petition of the debtor, of certain monetary claims of the United States against the suitor.[93]

§ 329. Claims against United States

The court of claims has jurisdiction of two distinct classes of cases; those in which the claimant sues in his own behalf as a matter of right, and those in which a claim is referred to the court by either house of congress or by the head of one of the executive departments.

The court of claims has jurisdiction of two distinct classes of cases: First, those arising under Judicial Code §§ 145, 180, 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 250, 287, and special jurisdictional acts, wherein plaintiff sues in his own behalf as a matter of right and in which the court awards final judgments, with the right of either party to apply to the supreme court for a writ of certiorari for a review; second, jurisdiction under Judicial Code, §§ 148, 151, 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 254, 257, where a case may be referred which may involve the findings of facts and report to congress without the right of appeal.[94] As a general rule, where a statute creates a right against the United States, but does not furnish the remedy, it may be found in the court of claims.[95] Conversely, where specific jurisdiction has been otherwise provided, the court of claims usually does not have jurisdiction,[96] but the right of a claimant to sue in the court of claims cannot be taken away except in express terms or by an unavoidable implication.[97]

Under the Judicial Code § 155, 28 U.S.C.A. § 261, the court of claims has no jurisdiction of a claim prosecuted against the United States by a citizen or subject of a foreign government which does not accord to citizens of the United States the right to prosecute claims against such government

A petition for the reformation of a contract with the federal government, and for damages for breach of such contract as reformed, is within the jurisdiction of the court of claims.—U. S. v. Milliken Imprinting Co., 26 S.Ct. 572, 202 U.S. 168, 50 L.Ed. 980, reversing 40 Ct.Cl. 81.

Stockholder's suit
The court of claims has no jurisdiction to adjudicate the rights of stockholders in a suit by minority stockholders alleging fraudulent practices by the majority stockholders or corporate officers to the injury of the minority and seeking for that cause to impeach or defeat a conveyance to the United States.—Leather v. U. S., 61 Ct.Cl. 388, certiorari denied 46 S.Ct. 473, 271 U.S. 660, 70 L.Ed. 1137.

93. The intention of this statute was to provide for the speedy disposition of claims by the United States against its officers and agents, and against those having contracts with it, by giving to such persons the right to come into the court and compel the United States to answer and have its claim determined. This relieves the suitor of the embarrassment entailed in the lack of a limitation statute against the United States.—Standard Dredging Co. v. U. S., 71 Ct.Cl. 218.

The admiralty jurisdiction of the United States Court of Claims is discussed in Admiralty § 3 a, and claims against the United States generally, and actions and proceedings by and against the United States generally, in the C.J.S. title United States §§ 136–210, also 65 C.J. p 1372 note 89–p 1431 note 9.

Other suits pending. Under the express provisions of the Judicial Code § 154, 28 U.S.C.A. § 260, no person shall file or prosecute in the court of claims any claim for or in respect of which he or any assignee of his has pending in any other court any suit or process against any person who, at the time when the cause of action alleged in such suit or process arose, was, in respect thereof, acting or professing to act under the authority of the United States.[99] The object and intent of this statute is to prevent the government from being sued in separate jurisdictions on the same cause of action and to require plaintiff to elect in which court to sue.[1] The act prohibits not only the filing but also the prosecution of any claim in the court of claims when another suit is pending in another court.[2]

The court of claims has jurisdiction to hear and determine all claims against the United States, except for pensions, founded on the Constitution of the United States or any law of congress or any regulation of an executive department, on any contract with the government of the United States, or for damages in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States if the United States were suable.

The Judicial Code § 145, 28 U.S.C.A. § 250, is the general jurisdictional statute granting the court of claims jurisdiction over particular claims against the United States. Under this statute, the court of claims has jurisdiction only in cases where the United States is defendant,[3] in actions on money demands,[4] in cases not sounding in tort,[5] in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of

99. Suits against United States Shipping Board Fleet Corporation

(1) Where plaintiffs have pending in the district court a suit against the United States Shipping Board Fleet Corporation, and the petition in the district court does not allege that the cause of action arose against a person acting or professing to act under the authority of the United States, and it does not appear that such defendant could act only under the authority of the United States, it is held that the court of claims has jurisdiction in the instant case, under Judicial Code § 154, 28 U.S.C.A. § 260.—First Nat. S. S. Co. v. U. S., 90 Ct.Cl. 632.

(2) In the case pending in the court of claims there can be no recovery unless agency of the United States on the part of the Fleet Corporation is established, while in the case pending in the district court if such agency is established plaintiffs' action must fail.—First Nat. S. S. Co. v. U. S., supra.

Action against state

The court of claims has no jurisdiction of an action against a state, or in which a state is impleaded as party defendant, and is a necessary party.—Milwaukee & Rock River Canal Co. v. U. S., 1 Ct.Cl. 187.

Interest on judgments

The court of claims has jurisdiction of a suit to recover interest on an unpaid balance of judgments against the United States, whether rendered by the court of claims or by some other court.—Standard Dredging Co. v. U. S., 71 Ct.Cl. 218.

Relief against private parties

The jurisdiction of the court of claims is confined to the rendition of money judgments in actions brought for that relief against the United States, and, if the relief sought is against others than the United States, the action as to them must be ignored as beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or if its maintenance against private parties is prerequisite to prosecution of the action against the United States, the action must be dismissed.—U. S. v. Sherwood, 61 S.Ct. 767, 312 U.S. 584, 85 L.Ed. 1058, reversing, C.C.A., Sherwood v. U. S., 112 F.2d 587, certiorari granted U. S. v. Sherwood, 61 S.Ct. 171, 311 U.S. 640, 85 L.Ed. 408—U. 25 C.J. p 991 note 74.

Failure to deliver letter

A claim for damage resulting from a mail carrier's failure to deliver a letter to plaintiff's address is based on a tort, and is not a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the court.—Threatt v. U. S., 77 Ct.Cl. 645, certiorari denied 54 S.Ct. 74, 290 U. S. 626, 78 L.Ed. 545.

False imprisonment

law, equity, or admiralty, if the United States were suable.[6] It is expressly provided by this general jurisdictional statute that the jurisdiction of the court shall not extend to hearing and determining claims growing out of the late Civil War and commonly known as "war claims,"[7] or other claims, which, prior to March 3, 1887, had been rejected or reported on adversely by any court, department, or commission authorized to hear and determine them.[8] Under the Judicial Code § 162, 28 U.S.C.A. § 268, the court of claims also has jurisdiction to hear and determine claims of those whose property was taken and sold subsequent to June 1, 1865, under the provisions of the Abandoned Property Act.[9]

Constitution, laws, or regulation of executive department. The court of claims, under the jurisdictional act, Judicial Code § 145, 28 U.S.C.A. § 250, has jurisdiction to hear and determine all claims, except for pensions, founded on the Constitution of the United States or any law of congress or on any regulation of an executive department.[10] A claim for private property taken for

Broad equity

Under the general statute conferring on the court of claims jurisdiction over claims founded on any law of congress and also for "damages, liquidated or unliquidated, in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, or equity, or admiralty if the United States were suable," there is nothing which authorizes a suit to be brought merely on the ground that as a matter of broad equity and justice plaintiff is entitled to relief.—Montgomery Ward & Co., for Use of Pettibone v. U. S., 94 Ct.Cl. 309.

Ownership

In determining the jurisdictional question of ownership, in cases brought under the provisions of Judicial Code § 162, 28 U.S.C.A. § 268, the validity of a sale of cotton to the Confederate States by the tutor of infant owners residing in Louisiana may be inquired into by this court, even though the property at time of seizure by the federal government was in the possession of the purchaser.—Walker v. U. S., 54 Ct.Cl. 48.

10. Action by state

The court of claims has jurisdiction of an action by a state against the United States for a demand arising on an act of congress.—U. S. v. Louisiana, Ct.Cl., 8 S.Ct. 17, 123 U.S. 32, 31 L.Ed. 69, followed in U. S. v. Alabama, Ct.Cl., 8 S.Ct. 21, 123 U.S. 39, 31 L.Ed. 73.

Appropriation

Where congress makes appropriation to pay interest specified in judgment of court, claim for such interest is cognizable by court of claims, and the court cannot review decision of another court awarding interest on hearing claim for such interest.—Benedict v. U. S., 66 Ct.Cl. 437.

Claims held founded on law of congress

Dent Act

If the claim, pursuant to an award by the secretary of war, is founded on the Dent Act, the court has jurisdiction as of a claim founded on a law of congress.—T. A. Gillespie Co. v. U. S., 60 Ct.Cl. 923.

Increased costs under National Industrial Recovery Act

(1) Under the special jurisdictional act of June 25, 1938, 52 U.S.St. at L. p 1197, which was remedial legislation, the prime contractor may sue for the recovery of National Industrial Recovery Act wages actually paid directly by himself, or indirectly by payments to subcontractors, and not otherwise; and subcontractors may sue for and recover wages actually paid directly by themselves, or indirectly by payments to subsubcontractors, and not otherwise; the final subcontractor may sue for and recover only those wages which he has paid and for which he has not been reimbursed by his principal.—McShain v. U. S., 87 Ct.Cl. 581.

(2) No right of action is given in the act to the contractor to sue for losses which have not been incurred by him or incurred by his subcontractors and paid by him.—McShain v. U. S., supra.

(3) Contract with the navy department for the purchase by plaintiffs of certain structures and materials, and the demolition of such buildings and removal thereof by plaintiffs, where the contract did not call for payment by the United States to plaintiffs of any sum of money whatever for any service to be performed or materials to be furnished by plaintiffs, was not a contract coming within the statute.—Pollock v. U. S., 91 Ct.Cl. 257.

Interest

The Act of March 3, 1933, 47 U.S. St. at L. p 1489 § 13, 31 USCA § 227, did not repeal, but merely amended, takes jurisdiction must be one implied in fact, not merely implied by law.[17] The common-law fiction of waiving the tort and suing in assumpsit cannot be used as an evasion of the limits on the jurisdiction of the court of claims;[18] but, where the wrong really derives from an undertaking, to stand on the undertaking and to disregard the tort is not to invoke a fictive agreement.[19] The court of claims has no jurisdiction to award damages for a mere consequence of lawful governmental action which does not constitute a contractual breach or a taking of private property for public use.[20] Under this provision of the jurisdictional act the court of claims has jurisdiction of a claim for private property appropriated to public use,[21] but, since no contract can be in fact implied therefrom, the court has no jurisdiction of a claim for private property taken for public use under a claim of right by the government.[22] Such a liability can be created only by some officer of the government lawfully invested

U. S., Ct.Cl., 95 U.S. 149, 156, 24 L.Ed. 442.

(1) The jurisdiction of the court of claims does not extend to a claim for money voluntarily paid to the government.—U. S. v. Edmonston, Ct.Cl., 21 S.Ct. 718, 181 U.S. 500, 45 L.Ed. 971—Machinery & Metals Sales Co. v. U. S., 57 Ct.Cl. 197—25 C.J. p 990 note 72 [d] (11).

Nominal damages. The court of claims has no jurisdiction to entertain an action for nominal damages.[24]

Pensions. The subject of pensions is specially excepted from the general jurisdiction of the court of claims.[25]

Patent cases. Under the express provisions of the federal statute, 35 U.S.C.A. § 68, whenever a patented invention is used or manufactured by or for the United States without license of the owner thereof or lawful right, the owner's remedy is by suit against the United States in the court of claims.[26] The benefits of this act do not inure to any patentee, who, when he makes such claim, is in the employment or service of the government, or the assignee of such a patentee, nor does the act apply to any device discovered or invented by such employee during the time of his employment or service.[27] The jurisdiction of the court of claims ceases when plaintiff becomes an employee of the government, irrespective of the method by which the employment was brought about, or the serv to be rendered.[28] A special jurisdictional act p mitting an employee of the government to sue the court of claims for an alleged patent infrin ment does not deprive the government of defen available in ordinary infringement cases.[29]

§ 331. —— Claims Referred by Congress

Whenever any bill, except for a pension, is pend in either house of congress providing for the payment a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, the house which such bill is pending may, for the investigation determination of facts, refer the same to the court claims.

Where congress merely desires to ascertain fa regarding any bill pending in either house of c gress providing for the payment of a claim agai the United States, either house may, under Judicial Code § 151, 28 U.S.C.A. § 257, refer claim to the court of claims for an investigat and determination of facts and a report thereof, gether with conclusions sufficient to inform c gress of the nature and character of the dem and the amount thereof.[30] The intent of congr

Holder of liberty loan bond, called for redemption April 15, 1934, and presented May 24, to which holder government refused payment in gold and tendered payment in legal tender currency, was held not to have suffered actual loss, and was, therefore, not entitled to recover in court of claims legal tender currency in excess of face amount of bonds, notwithstanding devaluation of gold dollar, in view of restrictive use of gold in domestic transactions, and restraints on transactions in foreign exchange or export of gold.—Perry v. U. S., Ct.Cl., 55 S.Ct. 432, 294 U.S. 330, 79 L.Ed. 912, 95 A.L.R. 1335.

Holder of gold certificates

In determining whether plaintiff, required by order of secretary of treasury to deliver gold certificates to treasury in exchange for currency not redeemable in gold, had claim for actual damages authorizing him to sue in court of claims, plaintiff could not claim better position than in case gold coin had then been paid to him, which coin, under applicable legislation and orders, he would have been required forthwith to deliver to treasury. Accordingly, plaintiff who, in obedience to order of secretary of treasury, delivered his gold certificates to treasury, under protest on Jan. 17, 1934, in exchange for currency not redeemable in gold, was held not to have sustained actual loss which would entitle him to sue in court of claims to recover just compensation which was allegedly unconstitutionally withheld, especially where, at time of such exchange, gold dollar had not yet been devalued.—Nortz v. Bowman Act

(1) Under the Bowman Act, 22 St. at L. p 485 c 116 § 3, U.S.Co St. 1901 p. 748, embodied in in this section of the Judicial C the court had no jurisdiction of claim which was barred by virtu the provisions of any law.—Nea U. was to grant to either house the power to refer to the court of claims for investigation any claim which congress might constitutionally pay,[31] and the object was to relieve congress and its committees from the inconvenience and labor incident to the investigation of claims, and to secure to the government the protection of judicial investigation.[32] The court is limited in its action to the items and amount stated in the bill.[33] A claim transmitted by congress will not be defined arbitrarily by the phraseology of the letter transmitting it. The court will look into the accompanying papers and determine what claim congress intended to have investigated.[34]

It is the bill referred which gives character to the matter before the court.[35] Under this grant of jurisdiction a bill referring a claim must be one involving payment,[36] but the court can take jurisdiction, although the bill does not in express terms provide for the payment of the claim.[37] A bill which, if enacted, would be simply a general law providing for the payment of a class of claims,[38] or which merely directs an administrative officer to investigate,[39] or which involves merely a matter of accounting,[40] is not a bill which may be referred. Under the statute, the court has no jurisdiction of a claim referred unless it is a claim against the United States,[41] of a legal or equitable nature;[42] but, if the claim is one of a legal or equitable nature against the United States, the court has jurisdiction.[43]

The court has no jurisdiction to determine questions of law in referred cases except such as are incident to the ascertainment and settlement of facts.[44] The court of claims has jurisdiction to make findings of fact concerning claims growing

(3) Claims held not barred.—Terrill v. U. S., 28 Ct.Cl. 465.

Loyalty

(1) The fact of loyalty is not jurisdictional under the Tucker Act, and, notwithstanding the disloyalty of claimant, the court may find the facts relating to the merits, leaving it to congress to determine whether claimant shall be paid.—Daigle v. U. S., 42 Ct.Cl. 124.

(2) The court may find the fact of loyalty or disloyalty at the request of either party for the consideration of congress.—Hunt v. U. S., 45 Ct.Cl. 566.

Successive references

(1) Notwithstanding the court of claims has once found the facts in a case under the Bowman Act, yet if it is again referred by one of the houses of congress under the Tucker Act, the court will reëxamine the case and again report the facts.—Hartiens v. U. S., 42 Ct.Cl. 42—White v. U. S., 33 Ct.Cl. 368.

(2) But, where a claim investigated by the court of claims under the Bowman Act is paid by congress on the statutory condition that the receipt of the amount awarded by the court shall be a full and final discharge of the claim, it is absolutely extinguished and barred, and cannot be reëxamined by the court by virtue of a second reference by the committee.—Pilkington v. Use of word "claim" will not divest the court of jurisdiction if it appears that the reference was under the act and that a bill was pending in the house referring it.—Dowdy v. U. S., 26 Ct.Cl. 220.

Special jurisdictional act

Where the bill referred merely provides that claimant may bring suit in the court of claims, it is not a bill for the payment of a claim or for a grant, gift, or bounty pending in congress, but, on the contrary, it is a bill to take the claim out of the domain of congress. The court cannot be called on to exercise in advance the lesser judicial function of finding the facts in a case which, if the bill becomes a law, it will later be called on to "hear and determine."—Cahalan v. Gratuity

Where a claim is neither a legal nor equitable demand in its character, the court will find the facts, but cannot assess the damages. The out of treaties with Indians under a proper reference by congress,[45] notwithstanding it has no general jurisdiction over such claims, see infra § 334.

Under the first part of the statute the government does not consent to be sued in a court, but expressly makes such claims subject to its final legislative action;[46] in the class of cases under the proviso that, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court on the facts established, under existing laws, the subject matter of the bill is such that it has jurisdiction to render judgment or decree thereon, it shall proceed to do so, the government expressly consents to be sued,[47] and the provision for the rendition and entry of judgment by the court is mandatory.[48] Under this statute either house of congress may refer a case to the court of claims, but neither the senate nor the house acting separately can authorize the court to adjudicate such a claim and render a final judgment.[49] A resolution of one house of congress transmitting a bill for the payment of a claim against the government is merely the vehicle by which the bill comes to the court, and its provisions in no way define or fix the jurisdiction of the court.[50] Under the statute, either of the houses of congress may refer a claim for the ascertainment of facts including those which may excuse claimant for not having resorted to his remedy in due time, to the end that congress may remove the bar of any statute of limitation by legislating for his relief.[51]

Special jurisdictional statutes. Congress has also passed from time to time various special acts authorizing the court of claims to adjudicate on particular claims.[52] Although the court has jurisdiction of all claims and questions fairly within the terms of a special jurisdictional act,[53] such acts are relief to be given, if any, will be a gratuity; and the amount of a gratuity must be a matter of legislative discretion.—Widmayer v. U. S., 42 Ct.Cl. 519.

Securing clear understanding

The findings of fact in congressional cases are to inform the legislative authority of those things which are necessary for the exercise of the legislative intelligence. They are not intended to present to congress legal questions for judicial determination. The court will, however, advert to the law applicable to the facts to the end that a clear and unmistakable understanding of the facts shall be secured.—Wilkes v. U. S., 43 Ct. Cl. 152.

Final judgment

(1) The proceeding is not to obtain a final judgment, but to give congress authenticated information necessary for legislative action.—Murfreesboro Presb. Church v. U. S., 33 Ct.Cl. 339.

(2) The jurisdiction of the court of claims to proceed with congressional references, investigate the facts, and report the same is not controlled by its jurisdiction to proceed to judgment in cases wherein the United States is defendant. The two jurisdictions are not interdependent, but distinct.—Montgomery v. U. S., 49 Ct.Cl. 574.

Forum

Jurisdictional acts merely provide a forum for the presentation and adjudication of Indian cases.—Coos Bay, Lower Umpqua and Siuslaw Indian Tribes v. U. S., 87 Ct.Cl. 143, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 642, 306 U.S. 653, 83 L.Ed. 1052.

Suit held within special jurisdictional act

Practical construction

Failure of Indians to seek further payment on large claim against United States between settlement of claim in 1909 and suit thereon in 1925, and their omission to mention claim of such size when seeking congressional action for passage of statute permitting them to adjudicate their claims against United States were practical construction that statute enacted did not provide for adjudication of such claim.—Klamath and Moadoc Tribes v. U. S., 56 S.Ct. 212, 296 U.S. 244, 80 L.Ed. 202, affirming 81 Ct.Cl. 79, certiorari granted 55 S.Ct. 920, 295 U.S. 729, 79 L.Ed. 1679.

25 C.J. p 993 note 4 [c], note 97 [b].

Individual Indians

A jurisdictional act can give individual Indians a forum in which to assert such rights as they may possess.—Sac and Fox Indians of Iowa v. Sac and Fox Indians of Oklahoma, 45 Ct.Cl. 287, affirmed 31 S.Ct. 473, 220 U.S. 481, 55 L.Ed. 552.

to be strictly construed,[54] and the court, in adjudicating such claims, may not go beyond the terms of the act.[55] The terms of the reference may be such as to authorize the entry of judgment,[56] or they may be so qualified that the court may omit the entry of judgment and report the facts to congress with its opinion.[57] Jurisdiction to render judgment "in any and all legal and equitable claims" cannot be construed to embrace a claim founded on an allegation that a former act of congress was fraudulent.[58] A special act conferring on the court of claims jurisdiction to determine the merits of a particular claim does not concede liability thereon.[59] A special jurisdictional act, however, may waive a special and conclusive defense to a claim,[60] and the court is to ascertain from all the facts and circumstances whether the act was intended to do so.[61] Accordingly, a special jurisdictional act may

Misappropriation of funds

Under a statute conferring jurisdiction to hear and determine all claims of an Indian tribe for the misappropriation of any funds of the tribe for purposes not for its material benefit, the construction by the government of a building as an infirmary for certain tribes of Indians, which was not used and was not suitable for the use of the Indians, was a "misappropriation" of the funds of the tribe within the statute.—U. S. v. Omaha Tribe, Ct.Cl., 40 S.Ct. 522, 253 U.S. 275, 64 L.Ed. 901.

Questions of law

(1) Questions of law and fact may be determined where the jurisdictional act so provides.—Oakes v. U. S., 19 S.Ct. 864, 174 U.S. 778, 43 L.Ed. 1169, affirming 30 Ct.Cl. 378—25 C.J. p 992 note 93 [g].

(2) Where the jurisdictional act so provides, title to real estate may be determined.—Hussey v. U. S., 32 S.Ct. 33, 222 U.S. 88, 56 L.Ed. 106, affirming 44 Ct.Cl. 324.

Law applicable

Special jurisdictional act was held to require application of statutory law in force at time controversy arose and continued.—Colgate v. U. S., 66 Ct.Cl. 667, certiorari denied 50 S.Ct. 15, 280 U.S. 553, 74 L.Ed. 610, appeal dismissed 50 S.Ct. 22, 280 U.S. 43, 74 L.Ed. 757.

Relief intended

Where a matter is referred by act of congress, statements of a committee will not be considered. The court will not go behind the act to ascertain what was the relief intended by it.—U. S. v. Weil, 35 Ct.Cl. 42.

56. U.S.—Norris v. U. S., 2 Ct.Cl. 155.

57. Judgment or report

(1) Where the words "when completed the court shall make a full report to congress" are used in the jurisdictional act, the court may omit the entry of judgment and report the facts to congress with its opinion.—Fond Du Lac Band of Chippewa Indians v. U. S., 34 Ct.Cl. 426.

(2) Although the reference is by a special statute to hear, determine, and report to the house, yet, the case being a congressional one, the court can find the facts only and report them.—Griffin v. U. S., 33 Ct.Cl. 228.

(3) Where the act directs both an "adjudication according to law" and that the court "report the same to Congress," a final judgment will be rendered and, in due course, reported to congress.—Irwin v. U. S., 23 Ct.Cl. 149, reversed on other grounds 8 S.Ct. 1033, 127 U.S. 125, 32 L.Ed. 99.

Correctness of judgment

The sole question submitted to the court by jurisdictional act was the determination of the correctness of judgment awarded to the government in the district court of the United States and it must be assumed from the language used in the act that congress intended the court to decide and determine this question on the merits and to waive any and all defenses which would prevent the court from doing this.—Hampton & B. R. Co. v. U. S., 89 Ct.Cl. 117.

61. U.S.—Butler Lumber Co. v. U. S., 73 Ct.Cl. 270.

Release

Appropriation and payment by the government for the lands and the ac-

refer to an action ex delicto and waive the defense of lack of privity of contract.[62] There must be a compliance with all conditions precedent contained in the jurisdictional act.[63] Where an act of congress provides for the acquisition of land by the United States by purchase or requisition, giving the president authority to determine just compensation to the owners thereof, who, if dissatisfied with his award, might receive seventy-five per cent thereof and sue in the court of claims for such amount as, added to the seventy-five per cent, would make just compensation, if the owner receives the full amount of the award without protest, objection, or reservation, the court has no jurisdiction to consider a claim for any further amount.[64]

§ 332. —— Claims Referred by Executive Departments

The court of claims has jurisdiction of claims involving controverted questions of fact or law referred to it by the heads of the executive departments.

Under the Judicial Code § 148, 28 U.S.C.A. § 254, when any claim or matter is pending in any of the executive departments which involves controverted questions of fact or law, the head of such department may transmit the same, with the vouchers, papers, documents, and proofs pertaining thereto, to the court of claims, and the same shall be there proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt.[65] In such a proceeding the court acquires jurisdiction, if at all, by virtue of the reference and not by reason of any subsequent filing in the court of a petition by claimant.[66]

The claim must be pending in the executive department in order to warrant transmission thereof.[67] Where an executive department itself has no jurisdiction of a claim, it is not pending therein within the meaning of this provision of the Judicial Code,[68] and its transmission to the court of claims by the head of such department does not confer jurisdiction to hear and determine questions involved.[69] A claim which has been reopened and reconsidered by the executive department is pendceptance of payment and execution of the release by the Indians was intended as a final settlement for the lands; and to revive by legislative enactment a liability once satisfied and expressly released exacts language in the statute which leaves no room for doubt of such intent.—Klamath and Moadoc Tribes v. U. S., 81 Ct.Cl. 79, certiorari granted 55 S. Ct. 920, 295 U.S. 729, 79 L.Ed. 1679, and affirmed 56 S.Ct. 212, 296 U.S. 244, 80 L.Ed. 202.

Report of referees

Where an act provides that unsettled claims of railroad companies for just compensation shall be submitted to a board of three referees, who shall consider all the facts presented and report in convenient form its findings as to just compensation to the president, who is thereupon authorized to agree with such railroad companies for just compensation, not in excess of the amount reported by such board, and, failing such agreement, either party may file a petition in the court of claims for just compensation, the report of such board to be prima facie evidence of the amount of just compensation and the facts stated therein, the court, on failure of such board to report such just compensation, has no jurisdiction to consider the claims.—Cairo, T. & S. R. Co. v. U. S., 58 Ct.Cl. 336, affirmed 45 S.Ct. 247, 267 U.S. 350, 69 L.Ed. 651.

65. Barred claims

(1) Under the Bowman Act, 22 U. S.St. at L. p 485 c 116 § 3, the court had no jurisdiction of any claim which was barred by virtue of the provisions of any law.—Chesapeake & Ohio R. Co. v. U. S., 20 Ct.Cl. 49—25 C.J. p 993 note 9 [c] (1).

(2) A claim transmitted by the head of an executive department was not barred, within the meaning of the statute, unless it was barred within such department.—McClure v. U. S., 19 Ct.Cl. 18.

(3) Thus limitation was not pleadable against a claim referred by the head of an executive department which was presented at the proper department within the period limited.—U. S. v. New York, Ct.Cl., 16 S.Ct. 402, 160 U.S. 598, 40 L.Ed. 551—U. S. v. Lippitt, Ct.Cl., 100 U.S. 663, 25 L.Ed. 747—Green v. U. S., 18 Ct.Cl. 93—25 C.J. p 993 note 9 [e].

(4) A claim which was barred before presentation to the department could not be referred.—Alexandria, Loudoun & Hampshire R. Co. v. U. S., 26 Ct.Cl. 327—Wadell v. U. S., 25 Ct.Cl. 323, 7 L.R.A. 861—Savage v. U. S. 23 Ct.Cl. 255.

Department in which claim pending

Where the claim of an Indian for property taken away by Indians of another tribe in violation of treaty obligations is transmitted by the interior department to the proper auditor of the treasury, the claim must be deemed to be pending in the treasury department, and may be transmitted by the secretary to the court of claims.—Byrd v. U. S., 44 Ct. Cl. 498.

Settlement and certification

(1) A head of a department may transmit a claim after the auditor and comptroller have settled it and certified a balance due to claimant. —Winnisimmet Co. v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cl. 319—Delaware River Steamboat Co. v. U. S., 5 Ct.Cl. 55.

(2) Where a claim allowed by the accounting officers of the treasury, and approved by the secretary, is subsequently referred to the court by the secretary, under Rev.St. § 1063, the award is suspended and subordinated to the jurisdiction of the court.—Glynn v. U. S., 32 Ct.Cl. 82.

ing, and may be transmitted.[70]

The claim or matter which may be transmitted under this statute is one involving a money demand in one of the general classes of claims of which the court has jurisdiction.[71] Claims which must be finally decided by the head of one of the executive departments cannot be referred.[72] This statute does not authorize a reference by the head of a department for a mere advisory opinion,[73] and an executive department cannot relieve itself from the investigation of claims except where they involve controverted questions of law or fact.[74]

The head of an executive department may transmit a matter to the court of claims without the consent of claimant.[75] A statute giving the secretary of the treasury authority, on the certificate of the auditor or comptroller, to refer any account, matter, or claim to the court for trial and adjudication does not apply to any other department.[76]

The head of an executive department, in referring a claim to the court of claims, may transmit whatever papers, vouchers, and documents relating to the case are in his department. The fact that some of the papers relating to the case are on file in another executive department will not prevent a reference of the claim.[77]

When the facts and conclusions of law have been found, the court must report its findings to the department by which the matter was transmitted for its guidance and action,[78] and the department is bound by the findings of fact and conclusions of law reported by the court.[79] The head of the executive department is entitled to have the facts found by the court and its conclusions of law and opinion thereon for the guidance and action of the department, even though claimant does not appear in the court of claims to prosecute the case.[80]

Under this statute, if the claim has been transmitted with the consent of claimant,[81] or if it appears to the satisfaction of the court on the facts established that under the existing laws it has jurisdiction to render judgment or decree thereon,[82] it shall proceed to do so.[83]

§ 333. —— Assigned Claims

The court of claims ordinarily cannot entertain jurisdiction of a suit on an assigned claim against the United States brought by an assignee thereof.

In view of the general prohibition of the assignment of claims against the United States, see the C.J.S. title United States §§ 157–159, also 65 C.J. p 1388 note 95–p 1391 note 45, the court of claims ordinarily cannot entertain jurisdiction of a suit on an assigned claim against the United States brought by an assignee thereof.[84]

§ 334. —— Claims Growing Out of Treaties

The court of claims has no jurisdiction of claims growing out of treaties, unless jurisdiction is acquired by virtue of a special act of congress.

The ordinary jurisdiction of the court of claims, under the Judicial Code § 153, 28 U.S.C.A. § 259, does not extend to any claim against the government not pending therein on December 1, 1862, growing out of, or dependent on, any treaty stipulation entered into with foreign nations or with Indian tribes,[85] but special statutes have from time to time conferred on the court jurisdiction to adjudicate on claims arising out of particular designated treaties.[86] While the court may exercise jurisdiction over such claims as come fairly within the terms of such a special statute,[87] jurisdiction is not conferred to hear and determine claims or matters arising from treaties which are not within its terms.[88]

§ 335. —— Indian Depredation Claims

The general jurisdiction of the court of claims does not extend to claims for Indian depredations.

The general jurisdiction of the court of claims does not extend to Indian depredations, which are, primarily, liabilities of the Indian tribes rather than of the United States.[89] The Indian Depredation Claims Act of March 3, 1891, 26 U.S.St. at L. c 538, provided for the adjudication by the court of claims for property "taken" or "destroyed" by Indians,[90] but as this act contained provisos barring all claims not presented within three years after its passage, and prohibiting any proceedings thereunder for depredations committed after its passage, a reference to decisions thereunder is deemed sufficient.[91]

Invalidity
Where an Indian treaty was executed and ratified by the government and plaintiff Indians, and the obligations of the government thereunder were discharged, and the benefits therefrom received by the Indians, there can be no recovery by the Indians on a claim based on invalidity of the treaty because of the fact that its ratification by them was overlooked and not promulgated by the officials of the government.—Crow Nation v. U. S., 81 Ct.Cl. 238.

The Tucker Act, redefining and broadening jurisdiction of the court of claims and repealing all inconsistent enactments, did not repeal statute providing that jurisdiction of the court of claims should not extend to claim against the United States growing out of, or dependent on, a treaty.—George E. Adjudicated claims
(1) Under some special acts the court is given jurisdiction only of claims not theretofore adjudicated on their merits.—Western or Old Settler Cherokees v. U. S., 82 Ct.Cl. 566—Cherokee Nation v. U. S., 82 Ct. Cl. 456—Eastern or Emigrant Cherokees v. U. S., 82 Ct.Cl. 180, certiorari denied 57 S.Ct. 13, 299 U.S. 551, 81 L.Ed. 406.
(2) The provision of a jurisdictional act for readjustment by the court of the account between plaintiffs and the government as adjusted in a prior adjudication is purely procedural, and in no way changes or enlarges the jurisdiction of the court, which is limited to claims not theretofore adjudicated and paid.—Western or Old Settler Cherokees v. U. S., supra—Eastern or Emigrant Cherokees v. U. S., supra.

Prior adjudication
Where claims of which the court of claims is given jurisdiction by a special statute are limited to legal or equitable claims and the subject matter and respective rights of the parties have been adjudicated in another court of competent jurisdiction, the court is bound by such adjudication and cannot redetermine the controversy under the jurisdictional act.—Duwamish v. U. S., 79 Ct. Cl. 530, certiorari denied 55 S.Ct. 913, 295 U.S. 755, 79 L.Ed. 1698.

Setting aside treaty
A special statute granting jurisdiction to hear and render judgment on claims arising under, or growing out of, a treaty does not confer jurisdiction over a claim which involves setting aside the treaty.—Klamath and Moadoc Tribes v. U. S., 81 Ct.Cl. 79, certiorari granted 55 S.Ct. 920, 295 U.S. 729, 79 L.Ed. 1679, affirmed 56 S.Ct. 212, 296 U.S. 244, 80 L.Ed. 202—Creek Nation v. U. Time limited Jurisdiction of court of claims in action against United States on claims of Seminole Nation was held limited to claims sued on before expiration of period within which United States consented to be sued and did not extend to cause of action not alleged in original petition which was filed within such period, where amended petition was not filed until after expiration of such period; since United States could not be sued without its consent.—U. S. v. Seminole Nation, 57 S.Ct. 283, 299 U.S. 417, 81 L.Ed. 316, reversing Seminole Nation v. U. S., 82 Ct.Cl. 135, certiorari granted U. S. v. Seminole Nation, 57 S.Ct. 23, 299 U.S. 526, 81 L. damages, or other demands on the part of the United States against any claimant against the government in that court.

Under the Judicial Code § 145, 28 U.S.C.A. § 250 (2), the court of claims has jurisdiction to hear and determine all set-offs, counterclaims, claims for damages, whether liquidated or unliquidated, or other demands whatsoever on the part of the government of the United States against any claimant against the government in that court.[92] Where there is evidence accompanying the motion of the government for leave to file a counterclaim which tends to establish fraud and the right to have judgment for a larger amount than claimant could recover, a discontinuance asked for should not be allowed.[93] If the court is without jurisdiction of the claim asserted against the United States it cannot retain jurisdiction of a counterclaim which has been pleaded.[94] In proceedings under special jurisdictional acts, items within the terms of the act may be charged as set-offs against plaintiffs,[95] but, where the jurisdictional act contemplates the consideration of counterclaims only as set-offs against whatever amount may be due plaintiff, and where nothing is found to be due plaintiff, there is no need for the consideration of counterclaims against plaintiff.[96]

§ 337. Claims against District of Columbia

The ordinary jurisdiction of the court of claims does not extend to claims against the District of Columbia.

The ordinary jurisdiction of the court of claims does not extend to claims against the District of Columbia,[97] but an act of congress passed in 1880, 21 U.S.St. at L. p 284 c 243, conferred on the court of claims jurisdiction with respect to certain contracts made by the district. As this act is no longer in force, it is sufficient to refer to cases decided thereunder.[98]

Reference of claims by congress. Congress has complete legislative control of the District of Columbia, and either house or a committee thereof may refer to the court of claims a claim against the district.[99]

§ 338. Claims of Disbursing Officers for Relief from Responsibility

The court of claims has jurisdiction to entertain suits by disbursing officers for relief from responsibility for losses incurred, without their fault, by reason of capture or otherwise.

Under the Judicial Code § 145, 28 U.S.C.A. § 250 (3), the court of claims is granted jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of any paymaster, quartermaster, commissary of subsistence, or other disbursing officer of the United States, or of his administrators or executors, for relief from responsibility on account of loss by capture or otherwise, while in the line of his duty, of government funds, vouchers, records, or papers in his charge, and for which such officer was and is held responsible.[1] To be entitled to invoke the jurisdiction of the court of

Gratuities

(1) Under some jurisdictional acts gratuities from the United States to plaintiffs are chargeable as set-offs. —Blackfeet et al. Nations v. U. S., 81 Ct.Cl. 101.

(2) Where it was contended that certain expenditures, made not pursuant to any specific obligation under treaty or agreements, were not solely for the benefit of the Indians but were made pursuant to the established Indian policy of the government and therefore should not be allowed as offsets for gratuitous expenditures under the provisions of the act giving court of claims jurisdiction of certain Indian claims, it was held that under the decisions in the Blackfeet case and other cases cited any amounts expended from public funds for the benefit of the Indians in maintaining and carrying out the government's Indian policy, as determined by congress, without obligation for such expenditures under any treaty or agreement, are gratuities which must be allowed as offsets under the provisions of such jurisdictional act.—Chippewa Indians of Minnesota v. U. S., 91 Ct.Cl. 97.

(3) Payment made to plaintiffs as compensation after the enactment of the jurisdictional act held not a gratuity chargeable as a set-off.—Chippewa Indians of Minnesota v. U. S., supra.

1. Statute held prospective in operation
U.S.—Glenn v. U. S., 4 Ct.Cl. 501.
The intent of the law is that the legal liability of disbursing officers remains unchanged, but that the court of claims sitting as a court of equity can award specific redress in exceptional cases, that is, where the officer can establish the fact that his official conduct was faultless.—Boggs v. U. S., 44 Ct.Cl. 367.

claims under this statute, the officer must be within one of the named classes;[2] and the term "other disbursing officer" must be confined to the class of disbursing officers previously described in the statute,[3] under the rule that, when general words follow particular and specific words, they must be confined to things of the same kind or class.[4] Under this provision one can petition the court of claims for relief as long as the government, while holding him liable on account of a loss, neglects to sue him in a court where his defense can be heard,[5] and the jurisdiction of the court is acquired by claimant appearing and filing his petition for relief.[6] The mere fact that the disbursing officer has not given bond does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to extend relief to him.[7]

The loss must have been incurred in the line of duty,[8] but jurisdiction under this statute is not confined to losses incurred in time of war.[9] Under the statute, a disbursing officer is entitled to relief for losses occasioned, without his fault, by capture by enemy forces during time of war.[10] Loss by "capture or otherwise" has been construed to mean, not only loss by capture and kindred ways under the rule of ejusdem generis interpretation, but the words "or otherwise" have been construed to apply to losses occurring in any way while the officer was in the line of duty and free from fault.[11] This statute does not extend relief for errors in the settlement of accounts.[12]

§ 339. Review of Decisions of Executive Departments

Where an executive department is vested with exclusive jurisdiction of a claim, the court of claims ordinarily has no jurisdiction to review its decision thereon.

Where an executive department or an administrative body is clearly vested with exclusive jurisdiction of a claim, and its decision is made final, the court of claims has no power to review such decision.[13] Where, however, the department is given exclusive jurisdiction only with respect to disputed questions of fact, an allowance or disallowance of a claim, based on a determination of questions of law, is reviewable by the court of claims.[14] The court of claims has jurisdiction where a private act directed the accounting officers of the treasury "to settle and adjust" an army officer's right to back pay and emoluments, for in such case, the duties of the accounting officers being simply administrative, they are not constituted a special tribunal to pass on the matter, and their adjustment is not final.[15]

§ 340. Review of Decisions of Prize Courts

The court of claims has been held not to have jurisdiction to review a decision of a prize court.

A decision of a prize court allowing a claim for weighing and gauging the cargo of a condemned prize is a judicial determination which is not subject to review by the court of claims.[16]

The act is not limited to officers of the army or navy. It also extends to disbursing officers of the executive departments.—Hobb v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cl. 189.

Losses in commissary and general sales store

The court of claims has jurisdiction of a suit by a major, quartermaster corps, United States army, to recover deductions from his pay made to recoup the government for losses sustained by a commissary and general sales store of which he was in charge through a regular detail, and for a decree relieving him from responsibility for such losses.—White v. C. PROCEDURE

§ 341. In General

The practice and procedure prevailing in the court of claims is substantially similar to that in other courts.

The rules of procedure and practice in the court of claims are not materially different from the general rules which obtain in other courts.[17] It is not unreasonable to require claimants to come within the jurisdiction of the court and comply with whatever orders may be made relative to the litigation which they have instituted.[18]

Rules. The court of claims may make rules governing its own procedure, but cannot enforce a rule violating or changing the effect of a federal statute.[19]

The purpose of provisions of the rules permitting either party in a patent case to file motions for interrogatories or bills of particular within a specified number of days from the filing of a general traverse is to expedite the proceedings and to bring the procedure more into conformity with patent litigation in the district courts.[20]

Consolidation of cases. Two or more actions involving the same contract may be consolidated.[21]

What law governs. Cases brought under special jurisdiction acts of congress confiding to the court of claims determination of particular matters involving the rights of corporations of foreign nations should be decided under principles of international law, and neither principles nor precedents of municipal law contrary thereto are controlling.[22]

Construction of statutes. In construing statutes affecting procedure in the court of claims, the courts may correct by construction obvious clerical errors in such statutes.[23]

§ 342. Conditions Precedent to Suit

A demand on a department is a condition precedent to suit in the court of claims only when made so by statute. Ordinarily an account for fees should be rendered by a United States officer before suing the government in the court of claims.

In the absence of any statutory requirement, a demand on a department is not a condition precedent to a suit in the court of claims,[24] but it is a very usual requirement of legislation with respect to claims against the United States that such claim be presented to the proper accounting officers, and in such case presentation within the time allowed therefor is necessary as a basis for a suit in the court of claims.[25]

Claims for fees for services. An officer of the United States cannot sue the government in the court of claims for fees for services alleged to have been performed for the United States until an account for such fees has been rendered and finally acted on as required by law,[26] unless the proper accounting officer of the treasury fails to act on the account within the period fixed by statute after it is received in his office.[27]

Protest as to insufficient payment. It is not a condition precedent to suit for a fixed sum claimed to be due that plaintiff should protest against prior payment of a smaller sum.[28]

§ 343. Limitations

a. In general
b. Computation of statutory period
c. Suspension of statute

a. In General

The statutory limitations barring recovery in the court of claims are jurisdictional and subject to waiver only by specific act of congress.

Act March 3, 1911, c. 231 § 156, Judicial Code § 156, 28 U.S.C.A. § 262, expressly provides that, with certain exceptions based on disability, every claim against the United States cognizable by the court of claims shall be forever barred unless a petition setting forth a statement thereof is filed in the court or transmitted to it by the secretary of the senate or the clerk of the house of representatives, as provided by law, within six years after the claim first accrues.[29] This provision is not only a statute of limitations but is jurisdictional in character[30] and the court of claims is without power to act on a claim which is barred under its provisions,[31] which cannot be ignored by the court[32] and which apply to special jurisdictional acts in the same way as to other grants of jurisdiction to the court of claims[33] unless some express words in the act negative their application.[34] However, they do not apply where, pursuant to the statute, a claim is referred to the court of claims by the house or senate for the purpose of obtaining information with relation thereto and the court is not considering it for the purpose of rendering judgment or of adjudicating the matter involved in any way.[35]

A rule of court cannot change the effect of a federal statute as to limitations by prescribing a rule as to the computation of time.[36]

Reference for findings of fact
Where a claim against the government of a subject matter which the court of claims had jurisdiction to adjudicate was referred to the court by one of the houses of congress for findings of fact before the statute of limitations had run against it, and the claimant voluntarily came into the court but did not present the claim to the court by filing a petition until after the statute had run against it, the court is without jurisdiction to adjudicate the claim and render final judgment thereon under the provisions of 28 U.S.C.A. § 257, Jud.Code § 151.—Farmers Cotton Oil Co. to Use of Choctaw Cotton Oil Co. v. U. S., 84 Ct.Cl. 468.

Certification to congress only power of court
It is held, following the decision in the case of Farmers Cotton Oil Co. v. United States, 84 Ct.Cl. 468, 472, that the instant case is barred by the statute of limitations and the court is without jurisdiction to take any action except to certify to congress the facts in the case.—Wailes v. U. S., 91 Ct.Cl. 317.

cases. The general statute of limitations, Judicial Code § 156, 28 U.S.C.A. § 262, hereinbefore considered, is not necessarily inconsistent with a statute which fixes a different limitation for a particular class of cases and may yield to such a statute,[37] but a claim which does not fall within the meaning of the particular statute will be governed by the general statute.[38]

Waiver and revival. In the absence of authority conferred either expressly or by implication, no officer of the United States may waive the limitation imposed by statute against suits against the United States in the court of claims;[39] hence the general rule that a failure to plead the statute of limitations operates as a waiver does not apply.[40] While congress has power to provide that claims referred to the court of claims by the senate or by the house of representatives may be determined on their merits without reference to any previous bar by limitations,[41] the mere reference of a claim to the court of claims under the provisions of a general statute does not confer on that court the jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim, relieved from any bar arising from the limitations prescribed by either a general or special statute.[42] The United States may in effect waive the bar of limitations by a congressional or other acknowledgment of the debt, as by an appropriation to pay the same, provided the acknowledgment goes to the specific debt or claim, and not otherwise.[43] A statute removing disability to sue does not create a cause of action in the court of claims as to actions respecting which the bar of the statute has intervened.[44] A statute limiting the time for the consideration of claims will not be construed to revive claims already barred.[45] So a provision by a statute for a rule which shall be followed by the courts and auditing officials in determining the law as applicable to a certain class of cases does not remove the bar of limitations from such cases.[46]

Payment from permanent fund

The rule that, where congress appropriates money for the payment of a designated claim or class of claims barred by the statute of limitations, the legislative intent is to give a new promise on the old consideration, cannot be extended to a case where the claim in suit is payable out of a permanent fund, provided by statute and not out of a fund provided by a subsequent appropriation act for the payment of a distinct class of claims.—Latham v. U. S., 47 Ct.Cl. 533.

Payment of admitted part of claim by the government does not constitute an acknowledgment of another part for which liability was denied so as to remove the bar of limitations as to the latter when prosecuted in the court of claims.—U. S. v. Wilder, 13 Wall. 254, 20 L.Ed. 681, 7 Ct.Cl. 286.

Statute applicable only to remedy

The statute of limitations applies only to the remedy and not to the rights of the parties so that a voluntary payment may be made even where the claim is barred.—Tserioni v. U. S., 94 Ct.Cl. 142, certiorari denied 62 S.Ct. 129, 314 U.S. 668, 86 L. Ed. 535.

U. S., supra.

46. U.S.—Grant v. U. S., Ct.Cl., 41 F.2d 863.

Laches. Inexcusable delay in prosecuting a case against the government which involves an interest allowance is a matter for serious consideration,[47] and, irrespective of limitations, delay amounting to laches may bar recovery on any suit in the court of claims.[48]

Consolidated claims. A barred claim is not removed from the operation of the statute by the fact that it is consolidated with claims which are not barred.[49]

Rights of interveners. Where suit is begun within the statutory period, one who becomes the owner of the claim pending suit may intervene after expiration of the statutory period.[50] So, where a suit is begun by one who cannot maintain an action thereon, it has been held that it will not be dismissed where the claims of those entitled are properly presented by intervening petitions filed either before or after the jurisdictional period.[51]

b. Computation of Statutory Period

Ordinarily the period of limitations runs from the time when suit could first be brought on the claim.

The claim accrues, within the meaning of Judicial Code § 156, 28 U.S.C.A. § 262, and other specific statutory limitations, at the time when an enforceable legal right arises so that a suit may be brought thereon,[52] and until that time the statute does not begin to run.[53] Ordinarily on a claim for services the limitations run from the time of the rendition of the services[54] or on the termination of the services.[55] On a breach of a contract by the government, ordinarily the statute runs from the time of the breach.[56] Under a contract for the performance of work, ordinarily the claim accrues and the statute begins to run when payment becomes due under the terms of the contract,[57] which may be on the completion and acceptance of the work[58] or at some time dependent on determinations, decisions, or actions thereafter.[59] Where damages occur during the performance of the contract, the full claim does not accrue until the completion of the contract, if it is completed.[60] Where a right is created by statute conditioned on presentation of a claim within a specified time, until that time no statute of limitation can begin to run.[61] Where the governing statute sets no definite period within which a governmental board shall act on claims, and where the board delays in acting on a claim, claimant may invoke the jurisdiction of the court of claims following final judgment of the board at any time within the period of limitations,[62] but this rule does not apply where the delay of the board in action is entirely due to the conduct of the claimant.[63]

c. Suspension of Statute

The running of the statute may be suspended pending disabilities prescribed therein or pending decision of an executive officer or department where such decision is a condition precedent to the existence of a right of action.

Judicial Code § 156, 28 U.S.C.A. § 262, expressly provides that claims of married women first accrued during their marriage, and of persons under the age of twenty-one years first accrued during minority, and of idiots, lunatics, and persons beyond the high seas at the time of the claim shall not be barred if the petition is filed in the court or transmitted within three years after the disability has ceased,[64] but provides that no other disability shall prevent any claim from being barred.[65]

Since, as has been noted supra subdivision b of this section, the statute of limitations begins to run from the date when suit may first be brought on a claim, the running of the statute is not suspended by the time in which it is held in a government department or office for auditing or allowance where it is not necessary for the claimant to present the claim to an executive department or officer before suing;[66] but where the right of action is dependent on the decision of a department or duly authorized officer of the government the statute does not run until such decision[67] although it is not suspended thereafter pending settlement or audit by the accounting department of the government.[68] Further, the fact that a claim must be presented to a

After alleged breach

Where alleged breach of contract occurred more than six years prior to the time when the suit was commenced, but less than six years elapsed between the time when the contract was completed and the suit begun, it is held that the suit was timely.—Joplin v. U. S., 89 Ct.Cl. 345.

No "piecemeal" accrual

A cause of action or a claim under a contract does not accrue piecemeal, and where a contract contains a provision with reference to the time when the contract shall be regarded as finally concluded, the statute of limitation with reference to bringing suit does not begin to run until that date.—Austin Engineering Co. v. U. S., 88 Ct.Cl. 559.

Withdrawal of claim

Where claim presented to the United States Shipping Board within the statutory period was withdrawn and no further action was taken until more than six years after the claim was withdrawn and more than twelve years after the claim originated, at which time a petition was filed with the board requesting it to resume consideration of the claim under controversy, the statute of limitations was held to apply.—Dawnic S. S. Corporation v. U. S., supra.

64. Insanity

The limitations of Jud.Code § 156, 28 U.S.C.A. § 262, run against all claims of an insane claimant accruing prior to his insanity, but not against those accruing subsequently, as the express terms of the statute render insanity an exception.—Leonard v. U. S., 18 Ct.Cl. 382.

Repeal by Tucker Act

Passage of the Tucker Act in 1887, which provided a six-year period of limitations for claims against the government without enumerating any disabilities tolling the statute, did not repeal by implication Act of March 3, 1863, c 92 § 10, 12 U.S.St. at L. p 767, now Jud.Code § 156, 28 U. S.C.A. § 262.—U. S. v. Greathouse, D.C., 17 S.Ct. 701, 166 U.S. 601, 41 L.Ed. 1130.

Alien

The compulsory absence of an alien denied admission to the country does not toll the statute.—Pacifico v. U. S., 80 Ct.Cl. 391.

Disability arising from service with Confederacy

Where a claim accrued while plaintiff was in the military service of the Confederacy and therefore unable to take the oath of loyalty to the United States prerequisite to maintenance of an action in the court of claims, the limitations nevertheless began to run from the date of accrual and his claim was barred where he brought suit more than six years from such date even though within six years from the general amnesty extended to former rebels. Plaintiff's disability to sue was not one of those enumerated in the statute and therefore afforded no ground for tolling limitations.—Kendall v. U. S., Ct.Cl., 2 S.Ct. 277, 107 U.S. 123, 27 L.Ed. 437.

66. U.S.—U. S. v. Utz, N.J., 80 F. 848, 26 C.C.A. 184, reversing 75 F. 648—Pink v. U. S., 85 Ct.Cl. 121, certiorari denied 58 S.Ct. 641, 303 U. S. 642, 82 L.Ed. 1102—Hendricks v. U. Claim under Dent Act accrued on the date of an award by the secretary of war, and not on the date of demand for payment and refusal, as under such act neither a formal acceptance of the award by plaintiff nor his demand on the secretary for payment was a condition precedent to the right to bring suit for the award.—Nitro Chemical Corporation v. U. S., 71 Ct.Cl. 458.

board or department for consideration and determination does not authorize the claimant to postpone the presentation of the claim until such a time as it shall see fit to proceed.[69] The rule that the running of the statute is not suspended pending the period during which a claim is being considered and passed on by government officials does not, however, apply to a claim referred to the court of claims for determination by the head of an executive department under statutory authority if the claim was presented for settlement at the proper department within the statutory period after it accrued.[70]

Congressional reference. The reference of a claim against the government to the court of claims by either of the branches of congress for findings of fact does not stop the running of the statute of limitations.[71]

The Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act of 1918 suspended the running of limitations against claims of men in military service against the government until formal termination of the First World War by presidential proclamation.[72]

§ 344. Defenses

The government may urge such matters as constitute a legal bar or an estoppel against the enforcement of the claim. The mere lack or lapse of an appropriation is not a defense.

A private act which confers "jurisdiction and authority" on the court of claims "to adjudicate, on terms of equity and justice," is not equivalent to a grant of authority to adjudicate the case on its merits, irrespective of any legal bar or estoppel. Therefore the government may still insist on a defense, which has been held in similar cases to bar the claim, irrespective of the merits.[73]

Lapse of an appropriation for payment of a claim affords no defense to suit for its recovery in the court of claims,[74] but a claim based solely on a judgment against the United States without either statutory appropriation or implied contract to sustain it is not within the jurisdiction of the court.[75]

§ 345. Parties

General rules as to parties and as to the right to intervene are applicable in proceedings before the court of claims.

The question of who are proper or necessary parties to an action in the court of claims is governed largely by the character of the claim and the statutes concerning jurisdiction.[76] Where a number of claimants allege an undivided interest in a common fund, they may unite in one petition,[77] the court may bring in parties not before the court who are alleged to have an interest in the cause of action brought before it,[78] and where ownership of a fund within its jurisdiction is in question the court has power to bring in all interested parties.[79] Where no one of several claimants has any right, title, or interest in the causes of action of the others, there is a misjoinder of parties,[80] although if the cases are of a class, arising out of the same transaction, the several cases may be heard together.[81] Under a statute permitting suit on a claim to be brought by the legal representative of a decedent, the heir may not sue while there is an administrator de bonis non acting for the estate.[82]

Prime contractor and subcontractors
While the courts endeavor to lay down rules to avoid a multiplicity of suits, in this act congress has granted the right to sue which continues to the subcontractors of the prime contractor, and whether it incurs numerous suits or great expense, the courts must bow to the wisdom of congress in enacting legislation; but the payment by the prime contractor to the subcontractor is not an assignment of the claim under the National Industrial Recovery Act, 48 U.S.St. at L. p 195, and, having paid the subcontractor, the prime contractor becomes the proper party plaintiff.—McShain v. or departments may be sustained as one in effect making the United States the party defendant.[83]

Aliens may prosecute claims against the United States in the court of claims.[84]

Change by amendment. An amendment radically changing the party plaintiff by substituting another person is not allowable,[85] and where, in a claim for Indian depredations, it appears that two separate depredations were committed by two distinct tribes, it is not allowable to make a change of parties by amending the petition so as to make both tribes joint defendants.[86]

Revival in name of administrator. A claim presented to the court by petition within the jurisdictional period by the attorney in ignorance of the death of the party is not a cause pending, and cannot be used as a basis for reviving the case in the name of the administrator after the expiration of the jurisdictional period.[87]

Intervention as party plaintiff. Where during pendency of a suit the ownership passes by operation of law to another than the original plaintiff, the new owner may properly intervene as party plaintiff.[88]

Intervention as party defendant. Under the statute limiting jurisdiction of the court of claims to suits against the United States, no person may be allowed to intervene as a party defendant.[89]

§ 346. Process and Appearance

In a suit against the United States, a copy of the process should be served on the attorney general, and where a claim is referred by congress claimant should appear or be cited to confer jurisdiction.

In suits against the United States, a copy of the petition is required to be served upon the attorney general.[90] Where a claim is referred by congress, the claimant must appear or be cited in order to confer jurisdiction.[91] Where an act of congress authorizes suit against an Indian nation and fails to prescribe the method of service of process, it is doubtful whether the court of claims can direct the necessary or proper service to bring defendants before the court.[92]

Suit in representative rather than individual capacity

(1) Nothing in the statutes limits suits by aliens to suits by individuals in their individual capacity, and a duly authorized alien executor of the estate of a deceased alien may sue in the same way as a citizen executor.—Hartmann v. U. S., supra.

(2) Since any citizen may prosecute a suit in the court of claims, in his representative capacity, without obtaining ancillary letters of administration, the same right must be accorded to a citizen of Switzerland, under the treaty between the United States of America and the Swiss Confederation of November 25, 1850, 11 U.S.St. at L. p 587.—Hartmann v. U. S., supra.

Russian corporation

A Russian corporation could maintain suit in court of claims for compensation for requisition by government of the United States of contracts for constructing ships, irrespective of question of recognition of present Russian government or right of American citizens to prosecute claims against Russian government.—Russian Volunteer Fleet v. U. S., 51 S.Ct. 229, 282 U.S. 481, 75 L.Ed. 473, reversing 68 Ct.Cl. 32, certiorari granted 50 S.Ct. 346, 281 U.S. 711, 74 L.Ed. 1133.

Reciprocity

(1) A citizen of a foreign country which gives American citizens the same right of suit against it as its own citizens have, may maintain the same kind of action in the court of claims as is permitted to an American citizen, notwithstanding neither the American citizen nor the alien may maintain that sort of suit against the foreign government.—Pollen v. U. S., 85 Ct.Cl. 673—Brodie v. U. S., 62 Ct.Cl. 29.

(2) Under the laws of the Kingdom of Italy a citizen of the United States is permitted to maintain a suit on a claim against that nation, and a citizen of Italy has therefore the reciprocal right to maintain a suit in the court of claims on a claim against the United States.—Sanguineti v. U. S., 83 Ct.Cl. 1.

Receivers of original plaintiff having claim against government could not sue United States on such claim, ownership having passed by operation of law to another.—Export Oil Corporation v. U. S., supra.

When surety denied right to intervene

Under the statute, Jud.Code § 172, 28 U.S.C.A. § 279, a charge of fraud on the part of plaintiff in the proof or establishment of his claim in a suit against the government goes to the whole of the claim, and plaintiff's sureties for his performance of the contract involved in the claim are not entitled to intervene. The court's finding that the acts of plaintiff brought about a forfeiture of the entire claim leaves in the case no subject matter with respect to which the surety might intervene.—Blume v. U. S., 81 Ct.Cl. 210, certiorari denied 56 S.Ct. 667, 297 U.S. 722, 80 L.Ed. 1006, rehearing denied 56 S.Ct. 746, 298 U.S. 691, 80 L.Ed. 1409.

Patent infringement suit

A suit for infringement by the government of a patent must be brought against the United States, and a contractor who agrees to save the United States harmless from suits for infringement will not be allowed to intervene as a party defendant in a suit brought in the court of claims by the owner of a patent against the United States for infringement.—Waite v. U. S., supra.

§ 347. Pleading

a. In general
b. Petition
c. Demurrer or plea
d. Counterclaims and cross bills
e. Bills of particulars
f. Amendments
g. Issues, proof, and variance

a. In General

While the court of claims will enforce the rules essential to the due administration of justice, it is not bound by special rules of pleading nor are its own rules as strict as those of some other courts. The general principles governing construction of pleadings apply.

The court of claims is not bound by special rules of pleading,[93] and its own rules are not so strict as those in some jurisdictions,[94] but it will nevertheless enforce those rules deemed necessary by all courts for the orderly administration of justice and to secure to defendants the benefit of the principle of res judicata.[95]

Construction of pleadings. The usual rules with respect to the construction of pleadings discussed in Pleading §§ 53–58, also 49 C.J. p 105 note 11–p 122 note 52, are applied in the court of claims.[96]

b. Petition

The petition must set forth a cause of action and one within the jurisdiction of the court of claims, stating the claim fully, but a plain statement of facts is sufficient. Verification is usually requisite. Allegations of fraud or coercion should be specific.

Claimant's petition must state a cause of action[97] within the jurisdiction of the court.[98] The petition must set forth the full particulars of the Liberal forms

"The forms of pleading in the Court of Claims are not strict, but liberal."—Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. U. S., 63 Ct.Cl. 485, 490, certiorari denied 48 S.Ct. 303, 276 U.S. 622, 72 L.Ed. 736.

Failure to plead the facts precisely will not preclude claimant from receiving what is justly due him in the court of claims since the forms of pleading in such court are not of so strict a character as to have that effect.—American Sanitary Rag Co. v. U. S., 84 Ct.Cl. 417.

Award of recovery despite faulty pleading
(1) The forms of pleading are such that judgment may properly be awarded in the amounts justly due the plaintiff on the facts, although due in a different aspect from that in which the demand is stated in the petition.—M. A. Long Co. v. U. S., 79 Ct.Cl. 656.

(2) The forms of pleadings are not of so strict a character as to prevent the allowance of a debt justly due defendant from plaintiff as against any sum found due from defendant to plaintiff even though there is no plea thereof.—Vulcanite Portland Cement Co. v. U. S., 74 Ct.Cl. 692.

(3) The rules of pleading exact the court's consideration of the facts in a case, as alleged in the petition or established by the evidence, irrespective of plaintiff's application of them with respect to a right of recovery.—Hampton v. U. S., 82 Ct.Cl. 162.

Recovery under statute not sued on Plaintiff bringing action under one section of Judicial Code is not thereby prevented from recovery in same suit under another section.—Standard Dredging Co. v. U. S., 71 Ct.Cl. 218.

Right to simplified procedure
In the patent jurisdictional Act of 1910, as amended by the Act of July 1, 1918, 35 U.S.C.A. § 68, congress has prescribed the forms of pleadings and the rules of procedure to be observed in such suits, but has not specifically defined the form of pleadings and practice to be observed, and the court of claims is not to be denied the privilege of § 4920, in its amended form, 35 U.S.C.A. § 69.—Pratt v. (5) To state grounds for reformation of an award under the Dent Act.—Perkins-Campbell Co. v. U. S., 44 S.Ct. 237, 264 U.S. 213, 68 L.Ed. 643, affirming 57 Ct.Cl. 623.

Allegations held insufficient
(1) Generally.—O'Leary v. U. S., 77 Ct.Cl. 635—Baum v. U. S., 64 Ct.Cl. 323.

(2) Petition held to state cause of action in tort beyond jurisdiction of court of claims.—U. S. v. Nederlandsch-Amerikaansche Stoomvart Maatschappij, 41 S.Ct. 72, 254 U.S. 148, 65 L.Ed. 193, reversing Nederlansch-Amerikaansche Stoomvart Maatschappij v. U. S., 53 Ct.Cl. 522.

(3) Petition alleging that plaintiff had no information on which to base allegation as to government contracts involving use of his patents held in effect to seek right of discovery, which court of claims has no power to grant.—Blenkner v. U. S., 65 Ct.Cl. 18.

claim,[99] and of the action taken thereon by any of the departments,[1] and where the claim is such as is ordinarily settled in an executive department the petition must show that application was made to that department and its decision thereon.[2] The petition should contain a plain, concise statement of the facts,[3] but such a statement is all that is required,[4] and a petition which shows that claimant has a claim may be allowed whether or not it is artificially drawn.[5] Allegations to sustain the equitable jurisdiction of the court should not be too general and indefinite,[6] and compliance with a condition precedent should be alleged and proved.[7] Claims set forth in the petition should be consistent,[8] and distinct causes of action cannot be brought together by proceedings subsequent to the bringing of the original action without the consent of both parties.[9]

Showing of representative capacity. The rule requiring the representative character of a trustee plaintiff to be filed with the petition in the form of a duly authenticated copy of the record of his appointment does not mean that proof of the appointment is necessary as an integral part of the original petition, or that failure to make such proof at the time of filing the petition is fatal, but proof may be furnished subsequent to the filing of the petition.[10]

Recovery on implied contract. The forms of pleading in the court of claims do not preclude a claimant from recovering, as on an implied contract, what is justly due him on the facts stated in the petition and proved, although there is no count in the petition on the implied contract;[11] but where a petition is based on an alleged infringement of a patent, and no infringement has been shown, there can be no recovery as on an implied contract.[12]

Verification of the petition is usually required,[13] although it has been held that verification is not jurisdictional.[14]

Fraud and coercion. To show a cause of action for fraud and coercion it is necessary for the pleader to state distinctly the particular acts relied on, and general allegations of "fraud" and "coercion" are mere conclusions which are insufficient.[15]

(4) A recital of the operative facts relied on by a claimant does not state two separate and distinct causes of action merely because such facts may set up a liability in both tort and contract so as to adapt a single claim to two different suits in district court and court of claims, and latter court lacked jurisdiction where suit was pending in district court.—British American Tobacco Co. v. U. S., 89 Ct.Cl. 438, certiorari denied 60 S.Ct. 974, 310 U.S. 627, 84 L. Ed. 1398.

Allegations held sufficient

General statement insufficient

Under rule 15, practice of court of claims, although liberal, does not allow general statement of claim in analogy to common counts, but requires plain, concise statement of facts relied on.—Merritt v. U. S., 45 S.Ct. 278, 267 U.S. 338, 69 L.Ed. 643, affirming 58 Ct.Cl. 371.

Reference to exhibits not attached by plaintiff

Where a plaintiff does not attach to his petition, as required by the rules of the court, the government advertisement or available specifications essential to the acceptance of a proposal, reference to them in the petition entitles the court to have recourse to them if produced by defendant, or by call of the court for them on its own motion, and to make them a part of the petition.—Jones v. Specification of participants

Acts constituting and persons participating in alleged fraud and coercion, vitiating claim settlement, should be specifically alleged.—Chamberlain Mach. Works v. U. S.,

c. Demurrer or Plea

The sufficiency of a petition to state a cause of action may be raised by demurrer, but an objection to the jurisdiction should be taken by plea.

The question of the sufficiency of the petition to show a right of recovery against the government may be raised by demurrer,[16] and on demurrer the case will be decided on the basis of the allegations irrespective of inferences which might be drawn from facts that might be proved.[17] Matters left in doubt by the allegations of the petition will not be decided on demurrer but decision of such matters will be made when the court of claims hears the evidence relative thereto.[18] An objection to the jurisdiction should be raised by plea,[19] but a plea by defendant that the cause of action declared on in a second suit against the government had accrued when the first suit was filed and might have been united in it is bad.[20] Limitations, as stated supra § 343 a, need not be pleaded.

d. Counterclaims and Cross Bills

Where all the facts and questions are before the court, recovery may be allowed the government as on a counterclaim without the filing of formal pleadings by it, although it is proper practice to file a counterclaim where it arises from transactions different from those on which plaintiff's claim is predicated. Forfeiture for fraud should be set up by pleading in the nature of a cross bill and not sought by mere motion.

The forms of pleading in the court of claims do not require that the right to recover on a counterclaim shall be restricted by the pleading. Omissions to plead counterclaims are not necessarily fatal to the rendition of such judgments as the facts demand.[21] While the filing of a counterclaim is proper practice for recoupment by the government against plaintiff's claim where the claims of the parties arose from different transactions,[22] nevertheless, where the government's claim against plaintiff is fully disclosed by the latter's petition, the court will take cognizance thereof without the filing of a counterclaim.[23]

Formal requisites of counterclaim. Where a counterclaim is filed it should state definitely the claim which the government makes against plaintiff.[24] If a report from the accounting office is pertinent, it should go into the file separately and not be attached to the counterclaim as a part thereof.[25] The counterclaim should be signed by the

Allegations that conduct was "willful," on the part of a government contracting officer alleged to have fraudulently and coercively delayed performance by plaintiff, were insufficient to show fraud and coercion where it was nowhere specifically alleged that the action of such officer was the result of mistake or fraud so gross as to imply bad faith.—Silas Mason Co. v. U. S., 90 Ct.Cl. 266.

16. U.S.—Price v. U. S., 33 Ct.Cl. 106, affirmed 19 S.Ct. 765, 174 U.S. 373, 43 L.Ed. 1011.

Dismissal
Where petition showed no contract breach of which might constitute cause of action, court sustained demurrer and dismissed petition.—Randall v. U. S., 71 Ct.Cl. 152.

17. U.S.—Portsmouth Harbor Land & Hotel Co. v. U. S., 43 S.Ct. 135, 260 U.S. 327, 67 L.Ed. 287, reversing 56 Ct.Cl. 494.

Allegations must warrant finding for claimant
On demurrer to petition in court of claims setting up claim against the United States, the question is not what inferences should be drawn from the facts that may be proved, but whether the allegations, if proved, would require, or at least warrant, a finding for the claimant.—Portsmouth Harbor Land & Hotel Co. v. U. S., supra.

Averment of government authorization
Where petition alleges that acts of setting up heavy coast defense guns with intention of firing them over claimant's land, and without intent or ability to fire them except over his land, and establishing a fire control station and service on the land, and discharging the guns thereover, were the acts of the government, it cannot be declared on demurrer that they were the acts of unauthorized persons.—Portsmouth Harbor Land & Hotel Co. v. U. S., supra.

"Servitude" shown
Petition alleging that the government set up heavy coast defense guns with intention of firing them over claimant's land, and without intent or ability to fire them except over such land, and established on claimant's land a fire control station and service, and discharged all of such guns over the land, as it had done some years before, and that it had thereby taken the land, set forth sufficient specific facts to warrant a finding that a servitude had been imposed, and was not demurrable, the allegation that the United States had taken the land being a conclusion of fact rather than law.—Portsmouth Harbor Land & Hotel Co. v. U. S., supra.

Purpose of government in using land for artillery practice
Whether the repetition through many years of the acts of firing coast defense guns across claimant's land and the establishment of a fire control thereon show an abiding purpose to fire the guns whenever the United States sees fit, or constitute only occasional torts, is for the court of claims to determine on evidence, and not on demurrer.—Portsmouth Harbor Land & Hotel Co. v. assistant attorney general or some one under his authority, and it cannot be recognized that an attorney's name be signed as of counsel for the government unless he is so designated or is authorized by the attorney general to appear in his behalf.[26]

Cross bill. The court cannot declare a forfeiture for fraud in connection with the prosecution of a claim on a mere motion, but defendants must file a plea in the nature of a cross bill, setting up the matters constituting the fraud.[27]

e. Bills of Particulars

The court of claims will grant a motion for a bill of particulars in a proper case where requisite in amplification of the pleadings of either party, but not for the purpose of securing admissions or of disclosing evidentiary matters. Plaintiff may not secure a bill of particulars from defendant concerning matters peculiarly within the knowledge of the former.

The function of a bill of particulars, as shown in the C.J.S. title Pleading § 376, also 49 C.J. p 622 note 17–p 624 note 32, is to amplify the pleadings where justice so requires, and the court of claims has sufficient flexibility of procedure to grant a motion for a bill of particulars if a particular set of circumstances arises in a case which requires amplification of the pleadings of either party in order to expedite justice;[28] but such a motion will be denied where its essential purpose is the securing of an admission rather than the amplification of pleadings.[29] It is not the office of a bill of particulars to require a party to disclose arguments or evidence, or to disclose the names of witnesses,[30] and where a party is entitled to information of this character he should seek it by an interrogatory or call for information rather than by motion for a bill of particulars.[31] Plaintiff may not secure from defendant a bill of particulars as to matters lying peculiarly within the knowledge of plaintiff.[32]

f. Amendments

Defects of form should be amended by the court if not the subject of demurrer, but other amendments are committed to its discretion. As a rule amendments designed to present the cause as the parties may be presumed to have understood it will be allowed, but amendments introducing new matters may be denied.

The court should amend defects and wants of form other than those which are demurred to,[33] but other amendments rest in the discretion of the court.[34] The general rule is that amendments designed to present a cause as the parties may be supposed to have understood it will be allowed,[35] but amendments to introduce new parties not in privity, to introduce a new cause of action, to enforce a penalty, or where the opposite party has been misled, or where an unfair advantage would result, will not be allowed.[36] An amended petition

30. U.S.—Martin v. U. S., supra.

Details of time and place unnecessary

Where it is proper for defendant to indicate whether it will plead certain grounds specified in the motion for a bill of particulars, it has been held to be unnecessary to specify any detail as to time, place, or character of events relating to such contentions other than within certain limitations.—Pratt v. U. S., 87 Ct.Cl. 586.

Statement of ultimate facts sufficient

Where a more complete answer by defendant with respect to the validity of the patent in suit would save considerable time and effort, a motion for a bill of particulars will be granted; however, it is not necessary in response thereto for defendant to set forth any specific evidence but merely to state ultimate facts.—Pratt v. U. S., supra.

Complete and detailed history of claims not essential

Where, in order to answer certain paragraphs of the motion, it would be necessary for defendant to construe the invention as covered by the claims set forth therein and apply such construed claims to each and every structure of this character made or used by the government within the six-year period, and then to express an opinion on these matters, this is clearly beyond the scope of any pleading, and does not form any basis for a bill of particulars. Conception of invention and ownership of patent

U.S.—Martin v. U. S., supra.

Employment

Information as to employment of plaintiff at a particular time is within the knowledge of plaintiff, and not properly included in a motion for a bill of particulars.—Martin v. U. S., supra.

Definiteness required of plaintiff

(1) Time and expense would be saved if plaintiff would give notice to defendant, either in response to a motion for a bill of particulars, or in some other form binding on plaintiff, setting forth the dates of conception and reduction to practice it intends to rely on, and the application of the claims in issue as applied to the alleged infringing structures. —Martin v. U. S., supra.

(2) Before a defendant can be called on to furnish a bill of particulars, the essential facts relied on by plaintiff to establish his cause of action must be pleaded; in the instant case it is held that plaintiff is in error in seeking a bill of particulars asking the defendant to divulge the prior art relied on in order to facilitate disposition of the case, without setting forth in plaintiff's petition the dates of conception and reduction to practice.—Martin v. U. S., supra.

cannot be filed, where a claim has been referred by a committee of Congress and dismissed for want of jurisdiction,[37] nor can an amended petition be filed, without submission to and specific leave from the court, where a case is remanded to the general docket with merely a general leave to amend.[38] Where an amended petition is filed, the recitals of the original are considered abandoned, except so far as they are incorporated in the amended petition, which must be complete in itself.[39]

Necessity for amendment. A petition seeking to have a suspension by the secretary of the interior of a contract for the construction of a dam held fraudulent need not be amended to enable plaintiff contractor to question the propriety of charges against his account for work and materials used by defendants in completing the contract.[40]

g. Issues, Proof, and Variance

The proof in support of a claim should correspond with the allegations in all material respects. In the absence of a plea nul tiel corporation it is unnecessary to prove incorporation of a claimant corporation.

Claimant must plead and prove the essential elements of a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the court.[41] Proof of the incorporation of plaintiff corporation, in a suit for the proceeds of captured or abandoned property, is unnecessary in the absence of a plea of nul tiel corporation.[42]

The proof in support of a claim should so far correspond with the allegations of the petition as not to introduce demands of which defendant had no notice,[43] and there is a fatal variance where the allegation and proof as to a material fact differ substantially;[44] but if a variance is merely as to a matter of form not going to the merits, judgment may be rendered in accordance with the proved facts.[45]

§ 348. Evidence and Taking of Proof

a. Presumptions and burden of proof
b. Admissibility
c. Weight and sufficiency
d. Affidavits and depositions

f. Calling on government departments for information

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

In accordance with the general rules governing presumptions and burden of proof, claimant has the burden of proving the facts necessary to establish his claim, and the court will indulge presumptions warranted by the facts and the law but decline to draw inferences which are unwarranted. The burden rests on the party seeking to show fraud or duress.

As a rule, the burden rests on claimant to establish every fact necessary to support his claim,[46] and to show that his claim is within the jurisdiction of the court,[47] but if the petition sets forth a good cause of action and defendants have records in their possession which will defeat the claim they should produce them,[48] and the burden of prov-

Under Jud. Code § 162, 28 U.S.C.A. § 268, giving the court of claims jurisdiction of claims for property taken under Act March 12, 1863, providing for the collection of abandoned property, a claimant cannot recover for cotton seized as abandoned property without proving ownership of the cotton.—Mangan v. Absence of release
In suit by Indians on claim against United States under statute which did not permit adjudication of released claims, burden was on Indians in court of claims court to prove absence of valid release of claim and in supreme court to show that, as matter of law, facts found compelled conclusion that release given was not valid, since absence of a valid release was essential to jurisdiction.—Klamath and Moadoc Tribes v. U. S., supra.

ing fraud and duress rests on the party alleging it.[49]

Under the general rules regulating presumptions discussed in Evidence §§ 114–157, the court of claims may indulge presumptions warranted by the facts,[50] or refuse to draw inferences which the facts do not support.[51] If the secretary of the interior has found facts from which the court may infer its own jurisdiction, the burden of proof is on defendants to show want of jurisdiction.[52] In proceedings under the disbursing officers' act before the court of claims by a disbursing officer to secure relief from liability for funds embezzled by his clerk, there exists a presumption of liability, and the burden of proof rests on the officer.[53] Where the decree of a prize court is silent as to the appearance of the master or owners, and there is neither protest nor proof to show that they were denied a hearing, the presumption is that they were given an opportunity to defend.[54] It must be presumed that a roll of Cherokee freedmen made under a decree of the court of claims was made in compliance with the decree because it was accepted by all parties and distribution was made under it without objection by any person.[55]

As to citizenship. Where citizenship of claimant goes to the jurisdiction, is preliminary, and is questioned, the burden of proof is on claimant.[56]

Counterclaim. The government has the burden of establishing by proper and sufficient evidence its right of recovery on a counterclaim.[57]

b. Admissibility

While the general rules ordinarily govern admissibility of evidence in cases coming before the court of claims, special provision may and has been made in certain cases as to evidence, witnesses, and taking of proof, and where applicable such special provisions control.

Where congress has not provided, and no special reason demands, a different rule, the rules of evidence as found in the common law govern the action of the court of claims.[58] Under the statutes, however, special provisions have been made in certain cases as to evidence, witnesses, and taking proof,[59] and the provisions of an act of congress prevail over local rules in the state where the cause of action arose.[60] So, also, under the terms of a reference by congress, letters and papers presented before congress, although not admissible under the ordinary rules of evidence, may be considered.[61] The evidence, of course, must be competent and

Freight rates

Where a government shipping officer orders railway cars of certain size for transportation of government property in mixed carloads, it is to be assumed that he considered cars of the size ordered to be necessary, and the freight rates chargeable for the transportation are those applicable to cars of the size ordered and used for the shipments.—Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. U. S., supra.

Validity of release and regularity of proceedings

Where release of Indians' claims against United States was given and accepted as sufficient to comply with statute providing that appropriation by United States for Indians should not be effective until Indians should execute release of their claims against United States, it would be presumed in suit by Indians on claim against United States that all things necessary to make appropriation effective and release valid were done regularly and in accordance with expressed will of congress.—Klamath and Moadoc Tribes v. U. S., 56 S.Ct. 212, 296 U.S. 244, 80 L.Ed. 202, affirming 81 Ct.Cl. 79, certiorari granted 55 S.Ct. 920, 295 U.S. 729, 79 L.Ed. 1679.

Duress

In suit by Indians on claim against United States in which Indians contended that release executed by them was invalid because obtained by duress, duress would not be presumed and would not be inferred from incomplete, doubtful, or ambiguous findings.—Klamath and Moadoc Tribes v. U. S., 56 S.Ct. 212, 80 L.Ed. 202, 296 U.S. 244, affirming 81 Ct.Cl. 79, certiorari granted 55 S.Ct. 920, 295 U.S. 729, 79 L.Ed. 1679.

relevant,[62] and waivers as to incompetent evidence cannot be countenanced.[63] The certificate of a referee in bankruptcy is competent evidence to show that a party plaintiff has been appointed trustee in bankruptcy.[64]

c. Weight and Sufficiency

General rules control matters respecting the weight and sufficiency of evidence in cases before the court of claims.

The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence, discussed in Evidence §§ 1016–1050, apply in the court of claims,[65] and plaintiff's petition will be dismissed where the evidence is insufficient to support his claim.[66] Similarly the government's counterclaim will be denied where the evidence adduced in support thereof is insufficient to establish it.[67] Competent and persuasive evidence introduced by plaintiff in support of his claim may control over the government's reliance on the findings of a board to whom the claim was orig-findings of a board to whom the claim was orig-

The evidence in particular cases has been held sufficient or insufficient to show damage generally,[71] appropriation of property,[72] boundaries,[73] fraud,[74] the existence of a legal or moral obligation on the part of the government to reimburse

Recovery without proof of "damages"
Although evidence was held insufficient to show damages which plaintiff suffered by reason of defendant's breach of its contract, where the claims board of the U. S. Shipping Board awarded plaintiff a certain sum for breach of its contract, and plaintiff accepted seventy-five per cent of the award and brought suit in the court of claims, where no proof was submitted as to the amount of the damages suffered by reason of such breach of contract, the court rendered judgment for the balance of such award.—Freygang v. 72. Discharge of guns over plaintiff's land
A continuance of the discharge of coast defense guns across land in sufficient number and for a sufficient time may prove an intent on the part of the government to fire across the land at will, or in effect to appropriate the property, and every successive trespass adds to the force of the evidence.—Portsmouth Harbor Land & Hotel Co. v. plaintiff,[75] the making[76] or termination[77] of a contract, title,[78] unreasonable or arbitrary action on the part of the government,[79] or other particular matters.[80]

d. Affidavits and Depositions

Depositions may be submitted to the court of claims under the general rules but ex parte affidavits are not regarded as evidence.

Ex parte affidavits are not evidence in the court of claims;[81] and a stipulation between claimant's attorney and the attorney general that ex parte affidavits may be taken instead of depositions cannot be upheld by the courts so as to dispense with competent evidence which the court deems material.[82]

In taking testimony to be used in support of or against any claim, the adverse party is entitled to an opportunity to file interrogatories, or to examine the witnesses by attorney, under such regulations as the court may prescribe.[83] If by a rule of court certain requirements exist as to reading and signing of depositions, they must be complied with, or the court may suppress them on its own motion;[84] and where a deposition fixes a jurisdictional fact, a second deposition inconsistent therewith on such point may be disregarded.[85] Where a party has taken testimony without leave of court, and under objection of the other party, the deposition so taken will be suppressed on motion.[86]

e. Examination of Claimant

In a proper case before the court of claims there may be an examination of claimant before trial, and in the case of a corporate claimant the officers are ordinarily the proper persons to be examined, although where all the stock is owned by two individuals it may be permissible to examine them as the real parties concerned.

An order of the court of claims for examination of an interested party should be in compliance with the provisions of the governing statute.[87] In the case of a corporation the officers thereof are ordinarily the proper persons to be examined;[88] but where all of the stock of the company is owned by two persons, they are in fact and in legal effect the parties claimant, and are proper persons to be examined under the statute.[89]

Fraud. The government's rescission of a contract for alleged failure of performance does not estop it from setting up fraud nor from examining claimants in an action on such contract.[90]

Record as controlling over oral testimony
Oral testimony as to facts and traditions, by witnesses many of whom have a direct interest in the outcome of the case, is insufficient to establish Indian title to a vast acreage of lands; it does not afford a degree of proof sufficient to overcome contemporaneous documentary and historical evidence to the contrary.—Coos Bay, Lower Umpqua and Siuslaw Indian Tribes v. f. Calling on Government Departments for Information

The court of claims may, in its discretion, issue a call on an executive department of the government in the nature of a subpœna duces tecum requiring production of information and documents, or of a "discovery", or may in a proper case refuse to make such a call, as where claimant has been guilty of laches.

The court has power to call on any of the departments for any information or papers which it may deem necessary.[91] Such a call has been described as in the nature of a subpœna duces tecum,[92] although other courts regard it as more analogous to a bill for discovery;[93] but the power granted the court to make calls on executive departments of the government does not confer absolute rights on a litigant,[94] the matter being committed to judicial discretion,[95] and claimant's application for a call may properly be denied for delay amounting to laches.[96]

Objection for lack of certification. When it was agreed by the respective attorneys that certain papers selected by them from a departmental file should be filed in court, the objection that the papers so filed and printed were not certified under the seal of the interior department comes too late after such action in the absence of any question as to their genuineness or any showing that they were filed through improvidence, mistake, or fraud.[97]

In case of a refusal, after notice and without just reason, to furnish original and competent evidence in the possession of the government, secondary evidence of the matters in question may be received.[98]

§ 349. Trial

On the trial the court determines both questions of law and questions of fact, and, where the loyalty of claimant is in issue, should determine that matter preliminarily to trying the case on its merits. Interrogatories may be allowed. There can be no demurrer to the evidence.

The court determines the facts as well as the law.[99] Where essential allegations are not established by claimant's evidence, the court will not determine what the rights and liabilities of the parties would be if the allegations were proved.[1]

The rules pertaining to the introduction of evidence are the same in the court of claims as in other nisi prius courts in the United States.[2] The established rule of practice is that, when parties have closed their proofs and noted that fact on the notice book, new testimony cannot be taken by either without an order of the court, and the application for leave to take further testimony must show the grounds on which the application rests, the issue on which it will be used, etc.[3] The court cannot make an order compelling claimant to take more testimony than he has taken. If defendants have evidence of their own to present, it is their privilege to take it. If they fail to do so, claimant is entitled to have the issues tried in the regular way.[4]

While a demurrer to the evidence is proper under common-law practice and in some of the states with statutory modifications, no such doctrine obtains in the court of claims, but on the contrary the practice in the latter court, as regulated by applicable rules of the United States supreme court, forbids a demurrer to the evidence,[5] and a motion to dismiss the petition on the ground that the evidence produced by claimant shows no liability is, in effect, a demurrer to the evidence and improper under this doctrine.[6]

Loyalty of claimant. Under the provisions of Judicial Code §§ 159, 160, plaintiff should show his loyalty to the United States in order to be permit-

Finding of ultimate facts as not including evidence
In its findings of fact the court is required by supreme court rules regulating appeals from this court to find the ultimate facts established by the evidence, and not the evidence establishing them. This rule will not be construed as requiring the court to include in its findings any evidence which the parties may ask to have included on the ground that such evidence is a proved fact; the court itself must determine what are the ultimate facts which the evidence establishes, leaving none of the functions of a jury to be discharged by the appellate court.—Natron Soda Co. v. ted to file claims against the government, and where such loyalty is in issue the question of loyalty should be determined before the case proceeds to trial on the merits.[7]

Interrogatories. The term "interrogatories," as used in the court of claims, has been defined as a question or series of questions in writing for the purpose of eliciting information to aid a party in making out his case when ascertainment of the facts either in support or defense is difficult, thereby limiting testimony necessary at the trial and simplifying the issues.[8] A motion for an interrogatory under Judicial Code § 164, is substantially the same thing as a motion for a call under the same section, as discussed supra § 348 f, and in either case the request is for information from the government to avoid examination of witnesses and to simplify procedure.[9] Under the procedure in the court of claims, where defendant is always the government, interrogatories should be addressed to the heads of various departments,[10] and the head of the department should pass on the question of whether the questions propounded might disclose military secrets.[11] The interrogatories should be so framed as to avoid the necessity for construction or interpretation of facts complicating the issues,[12] and should not be so drawn as to require defendant in effect to admit or deny legal conclusions.[13] In patent cases the interrogatories may properly ask defendant to admit or deny the correctness of certain drawings submitted by plaintiff as true representations of machines made or used by defendant, but should not require defendant itself to make drawings nor to compose descriptions not already in existence.[14] The answers given to interrogatories by a head of department are binding on the government if certified by his signature and the oath may be waived.[15]

In congressional cases the court must inquire into every material fact necessary to enable congress to act intelligently when disposing of the claims;[16] and the court will consider and determine every issue necessary to the proper disposition of the matter,[17] and transmit its special findings of fact and conclusions of law in accordance with applicable resolutions and statutes.[18]

§ 350. References

The report of a commissioner to whom a case has been referred becomes the judgment of the court on approval and adoption, but until approval the findings of the commissioner are in no sense final. General rules governing references in the federal courts control references in the court of claims in the absence of any rule of such court on the matter.

The court may in proper cases refer a cause to a special commissioner, and after due deliberation approve his report, and the judgment rendered will be that of the court and not that of the commissioner alone,[19] but until officially made by the court itself the findings of fact by a commissioner to whom the case has been referred are not final and conclusive.[20] In the absence of any rule of the court of claims on the subject, such references are to be governed by rules in similar cases, governing references to referees and masters, adopted by other federal courts.[21] Where a delay in discovering

The report of a commissioner of the court of claims is not final as to the facts in a case, the findings of fact not being final and conclusive until officially made by the court itself; and a patent is not invalidated by failure of the patentee to disclaim certain claims of the patent found and reported by the commissioner as anticipated by the prior art, or to except to such finding of the commissioner.—Pratt v. U. S., supra.

Controlling sequence of evidence under alternative counts

Where petitions in actions against the United States for judgment for compensation with respect to alleged unauthorized use of patented inventions contained alternative claims or counts, the commissioner to whom cases were referred to take evidence additional evidence and a failure to produce it are inexcusable, a request to introduce additional evidence and again refer the case will not be granted.[22]

§ 351. Rules of Decision

The court of claims may determine cases coming before it according to their own facts, under controlling decisions of the supreme court.

Decisions of the supreme court are, of course, controlling on the court of claims.[23] The liability of the government should be determined by the settled principles of law;[24] and the court will construe an act of congress on which a claim is alleged to be founded, according to the rules of construction which long and continued experience has determined to be best adapted for the purpose.[25] Beyond this, no general rules of decision can be laid down, but each case coming before the court of claims is necessarily to be determined according to its own peculiar facts.[26] Where a former ruling would result in inequality to the officers and men who served in the late Spanish War, and where the comptroller of the treasury has construed certain statutes favorably to claimants, and congress has subsequently legislated on the same subject with apparent approval, and certainly no disapproval, of the comptroller's ruling, the court will resolve all doubts in favor of claimants, who have no right of appeal.[27] Where the jurisdiction conferred on the court of claims is to hear and determine a case according to principles of equity and justice, the case will be heard on the merits, and not decided on an estoppel arising from the negligence of parties.[28]

§ 352. Findings or Report

It is the duty of the court of claims in a case before it to make findings of fact and conclusions of law. The court should find the ultimate fact, but failure to do so is not fatal where the findings of subsidiary facts are such that the ultimate fact appears by essential inference. The court has power to make amended, substitutional, or additional findings but may in its discretion refuse a tardy request to do so.

With the trial in the court of claims the rights of counsel over the findings of fact cease and those of the court begin.[29] It is the duty of the court to make findings as to essential matters,[30] to find the facts established by the evidence,[31] and to make a separate statement of the conclusions of law on the facts so found,[32] but it is not obliged to rule specifically on separate requests of counsel.[33] The duty of the court is to find the ultimate facts,[34] and its failure to do so is fatal where the findings as to subsidiary facts do not raise a necessary inference of the ultimate fact on which judgment and make a report of the facts would be directed to control manner and sequence in which evidence was presented, so that facts relating specifically to one count would not be confused with facts relating solely to the other count, and the parties, commissioner, and the court would know to what count certain evidence pertained.—Hammond v. Constitutionality of statute

Practice outlined
Under Supreme Court Rules, rule 5, concerning appeals from and governing findings of fact in this court, and rules 73 and 74 promulgated by this court, "the requests required to be submitted by the parties are for the assistance of the court in making up its finding and not for the purpose of obtaining specific rulings on each one separately in the form by them presented. The practice of the court is to give to the requests of the parties the fullest consideration and the most careful scrutiny, and, without finding or ruling upon each one separately, to make up an accurate and connected finding, in its own language, in such way as to cover each material fact asked for on either side, and to present to the Supreme Court on appeal a clear and concise statement of the case upon which questions of law may be there reviewed."—Delaware L. & W. Resolving conflicting inferences
The requirement, by supreme court rule, that court of claims shall find ultimate facts which are controlling, places on court of claims duty of resolving conflicting inferences and drawing from evidence necessary conclusions of fact.—U. S. v. Esnault-Pelterie, 58 S.Ct. 412, 303 U.S. 26, 82 L.Ed. 625, affirming Esnault-Pelterie v. U. S., 84 Ct.Cl. 625, certiorari granted U. S. v. may be based.[35] However, the absence of a finding of ultimate facts is not fatal if the circumstantial facts as found are such that the ultimate fact follows from them as a necessary inference,[36] and such inference may be drawn although the findings are to be treated like the verdict of a jury in the sense that an appellate court may not add to or modify them.[37] A negative finding to the effect that there is nothing in the evidence to show a certain fact is proper where the state of the evidence warrants it.[38] A finding made in an action at law disposes of all matters of fact[39] and is final where there is any evidence of the fact,[40] and no exception is taken.[41] In cases coming to a hearing on the report of a commissioner, parties dissatisfied with the facts found in the report must present their requests for additional findings at the hearing, and not afterward as in ordinary cases.[42] In a proceeding in equity, a finding of the ultimate facts for the consideration of the supreme court is not required, as the whole record goes up.[43] Recitals in a finding, that the claim in suit was supported by the testimony of but two witnesses, and that "the court is not satisfied by this evidence," followed by the statement, in the opinion, that the court "has no reason, other than the lapse of time and the inaction of the claimant, to discredit the witnesses or suspect the claim," do not justify a reversal, on the ground that the court attempted to create a rule of evidence as to the number of witnesses necessary to prove such a claim.[44]

Amended or additional findings. The court retains jurisdiction over its findings and can entertain motions from either side to amend them until the granting of an appeal,[45] and on a motion to amend its findings, the court may withdraw its findings and set aside its judgment and file new findings and enter a second judgment.[46] A requested amendment of findings will be denied where the amendment sought would be in effect a finding of evidence contrary to the rules,[47] or where the request for further or amended findings is an unwarranted effort to change negative to positive findings.[48] Requests for additional findings may be rejected by the court in its discretion if filed after the period prescribed by applicable rules.[49]

In a congressional case the findings by the court should show everything necessary for an understanding of the case in congress;[50] but where the findings are sufficient to govern intelligent action by congress, the court will not make new or additional findings on a motion for a new trial.[51] Where a suit is brought by virtue of a reference by congress, and the court refuses to enter judgment as requested, it will find the facts and report them to congress, as in other congressional cases.[52] Where a bill referred by congress is for the payment of a specific amount "in full payment and discharge of the claim," the findings of the court must be limited to that amount;[53] and where such a bill fixes the value of the property at an amount named, the court is without authority to exceed the amount when finding the value of the property.[54] The report in a case referred by congress is neither a judgment, an award, nor a recommendation, but merely a recital of proved facts;[55] and it follows that such reports create no vested rights.[56]

question not passed on in its original opinion, but of which it was given jurisdiction by statute, has been held a part of the decision of the case.[57]

§ 353. Judgment and Relief

a. In general
b. Nature and extent of relief
c. Conformity to pleadings, proof, and findings
d. Judgment by consent or on default
e. Amendment or correction of judgment
f. Payment and enforcement of judgment
g. Res judicata

a. In General

The court of claims has power to render judgment against the United States where so authorized by statute and in this connection may adjudicate all matters essential to the establishment of a claim within its jurisdiction.

The court of claims has power to render a judgment against the United States,[58] and, where the claim is within its jurisdiction, to adjudicate all matters necessary to the establishment of its validity;[59] but where a judgment of the court of claims was absolutely reversed for an error as to interest, and the cause remanded for further proceedings, and after the filing of mandate and motion for judgment for the principal without interest, but before the entry of judgment, the statute on which the proceeding was based, which conferred a mere gratuity, was repealed, the court of claims had no jurisdiction to enter judgment.[60]

Postponing entry of judgment. Where the several claims of a large number of Indians are united in a single suit, the entry of judgment will be suspended until it appears which of the claimants are still living, who are the administrators of deceased claimants, etc.[61]

"Congressional cases". Where the statute under which a case is referred to the court of claims contemplates merely a report to the congress or one of its branches, there is no power in the court of claims to go further and render a judgment.[62]

b. Nature and Extent of Relief

(1) In general
(2) Dismissal or discontinuance

(1) In General

The court of claims may within statutory restrictions award judgment in favor of plaintiff or defendant for pecuniary damages shown to be justly due, but may not give a judgment to claimant for nominal damages, and it ordinarily lacks power to award equitable relief except in cases where equitable powers are expressly conferred on it. The award of interest is generally beyond the power and purview of the court of claims, although exceptions to the rule may occur.

Where claimant has suffered pecuniary loss under circumstances rendering the government liable therefor, the court of claims may, within statutory restrictions,[63] award him such damages as justice requires;[64] but where claimant has suffered no pe-

Suit against funds of private corporation held by government

Congress has power to authorize a suit in the court of claims to be brought by a creditor, such as a seaman, against the government to collect his claim from funds of a private corporation, such as a shipping company, out of the funds of the latter which have been covered into the United States treasury, and under applicable statute it has been held that the court of claims has power to render judgment in such a case.—Garrett v. U. S., 70 Ct.Cl. 304.

Determining overpayment on claim for refund

Where plaintiff contended that, while the court had authority to determine a refund and to enter judgment for its payment, it had no authority to determine an overpayment, in denying such contention the court held that a finding of an overpayment was necessary in order to establish the right to a refund and that, having jurisdiction of the claim, it had authority to determine all matters, including overpayment, essential to determination of the validity of the claim.—Magee v. U. S., supra.

Right of "adjudicating"

"Congress having by amendment eliminated from the jurisdictional act authority of the court to render judgment, and having inserted other language requiring that the court report to congress the law and the facts, it is held that the court has no power to render a judgment although the jurisdictional act contains the language 'the Court of Claims in considering and adjudicating the above described claim, etc.' (Italics ours.)"—Barlow v. U. S., supra.

Indian claims

Under the terms of the applicable statute, it has been held that, while the court of claims may render a judgment in favor of the whole tribe, it lacks power to adjudicate the claims of individuals within such tribe.—Cherokee Nation v. U. S., supra.

cuniary loss, there can be no recovery even if his legal rights may have been infringed, as nominal damages are not recoverable in the court of claims.[65]

Where a settlement of the account between plaintiff and defendants, taking into consideration defendants' valid counterclaim, shows a balance in favor of the government, a judgment may be entered in favor of defendants for such balance.[66]

The court of claims has no general equity powers;[67] but equity powers have from time to time been especially conferred on it by particular statutes;[68] and where such powers are conferred, the court may reform a contract and adjust the accounts of the parties thereunder.[69]

Appropriation of land. Where the government enters on a tract of land without designating the portion to be taken for public use, and the owner brings an action for the value of the whole tract, the court will institute proceedings to ascertain how much is absolutely required by the government, and will designate the portion so taken by metes and bounds, and render judgment for the value thereof.[70]

Impressment or capture of property. If property is captured, intermingled, sold, and the proceeds paid into the treasury in a common fund, judgment may be rendered in each case for a sum which bore the same proportion to the whole fund still on hand that the quantity of claimant's property did to the whole number represented by the fund.[71] If a claim is referred for adjudication as to property taken and impressed into the service of the United States, it is erroneous for the court to render judgment based on damages arising from mere detention and delay of the property.[72] In the case of French spoliation claims, the court found only as to the validity and amount of the claim, and the legal representations of the parties entitled thereto.[73]

On division of court. If the court is equally divided as to claimant's right to recover, the petition will be dismissed in order that he may take his appeal.[74] Where the court is equally divided as to the right of claimant to recover for the whole claim, but a majority of the judges are of the opinion that he should recover a part, a judgment will be ordered for the part, with leave to claimant to move to vacate it and have the case reheard before a full bench.[75]

Interest. Ordinarily the court of claims cannot allow interest on any claim up to the time of the rendition of judgment,[76] unless on a contract expressly stipulating for the payment of interest.[77] In the case of unpaid royalties interest has been allowed,[78] and where the claim is based on the judgment of another federal court allowing a certain sum and interest, it is permissible for the judgment of the court of claims to award interest.[79]

(2) Dismissal or Discontinuance

A claim may be dismissed where there is a suit pending on it in a federal district court or in other cases where it appears that no recovery can be had, and a tardy motion for reinstatement may be denied.

79. U.S.—Benedict v. U. S., 66 Ct.Cl. 437.

It is proper to dismiss a claim where it is shown that plaintiff could not recover thereon,[80] as where there was an action pending in the district court based on the claim at the time when it was filed,[81] and it is proper to dismiss a claim which was disallowed by the southern claims commission and resubmitted to the court on the same evidence.[82] Where, under applicable statute, the court is in doubt as to whether to dismiss a case or to report the facts to congress without rendering judgment, it will pursue the latter course.[83]

Reinstatement. The court has announced that it will not indulge in the practice of allowing a discontinuance or dismissal coupled with any right of restoration to the docket.[84] Where a case has been dismissed for want of prosecution, it passes out of the jurisdiction of the court at the end of the term during which the dismissal is made, unless a motion for reinstatement is made during that term,[85] and after dismissal of a claim transmitted by congress and notice of its dismissal, the court loses control thereof[86] and a tardy motion for reinstatement will be denied.[87]

Where an Indian depredation case was dismissed for want of prosecution, a motion to reinstate under the statute requiring reinstatement of such cases which had been dismissed for want of proof of citizenship should show, from the evidence taken and filed or the court records, that the case would have failed on the jurisdictional issue of citizenship, and that this was the reason of claimant's failure to resist the motion to dismiss for want of prosecution.[88]

Following dismissal of a claim on plaintiff's motion after defendant's failure to file any pleadings, the order of dismissal will not be vacated on defendant's motion to permit it to file a counterclaim, especially not where plaintiff on the day following dismissal entered suit in a state court on the same cause of action.[89]

c. Conformity to Pleadings, Proof, and Findings

The judgment should be in substantial conformity to the pleadings and evidence and find support in the findings made.

While the relief granted must conform to the pleadings,[90] a substantial conformity is sufficient.[91] The judgment must accord with, and be supported by, the findings[92] and the evidence,[93] and the facts found must be sufficient to support the judgment.[94]

d. Judgment by Consent or on Default

The court of claims may enter judgment on consent or by default where, and only where, the evidence so warrants.

The court of claims may enter judgment on stipulation of the parties if, after examination of the record, it believes that the evidence adequately supports the judgment.[95]

Where the attorney general fails to file a plea, claimant cannot have judgment by default, but must establish his claim by evidence.[96]

e. Amendment or Correction of Judgment

The judgment is open to amendment or correction on proper grounds, but may not be changed by the court of claims after affirmance by the United States supreme court. The judgment of the court of claims is final as against an application for rehearing unless one of the judges participating in the judgment rendered subsequently desires a reargument.

Where it clearly appears that competent evidence was overlooked by the court, or that its judgment or findings were based on fraudulent testimony or procured through the misconduct of either party, the court can correct the judgment or the findings as it would have done at the time if the real facts had been known;[97] but the court cannot change a decree after it has been affirmed by the supreme court.[98] Where by statute congress directed the court to reopen a claim and correct an error in rendering judgment on its being so found, it being apparent that congress supposed that an error had been made and the evidence not being inconsistent therewith, the judgment was corrected.[99]

Rehearing. In the absence of oversight or misapprehension, in the nature of a mistake of fact, a decision of the court of claims on a point must be regarded as final unless one of the judges joining in rendering the judgment complained of should subsequently desire a reargument after examination of the grounds on which it is sought; in the latter case the motion presented at chambers will be referred to the law docket; otherwise it will be denied at chambers.[1]

f. Payment and Enforcement of Judgment

Payment of a judgment should be effected in accordance with requirements of statute and may be suspended pending performance of essential conditions. While there is no provision generally for enforcement of a judgment against the United States, the government is in duty bound to make an appropriation to satisfy it.

Where the statute provides that payment shall be a full discharge of claims against the government, the court of claims cannot afterward correct the amount of the judgment;[2] nor can a claim be reexamined by the court by virtue of a second reference where the claim is paid, since by such payment it becomes absolutely extinguished.[3] Acceptance of payment of a judgment, rendered on report of a commissioner, waives an error of computation by the latter.[4] Payment of a judgment should be effected in compliance with its provisions.[5]

Enforcement. While the court of claims has no power to enforce a judgment against the United States, the government is in duty bound to respond to such a judgment by way of appropriation.[7]

g. Res Judicata

The doctrine of res judicata applies in the court of claims.

The doctrine of res judicata is applicable in the court of claims;[8] but the United States is not bound by judgments against a state in state courts for moneys expended by the state for the benefit of the United States.[9] A judgment rendered by the court of claims under its general jurisdiction, which stands unvacated and unreversed, is a final judgment[10] and within the rule of res judicata,[11] even though it is founded on an erroneous ruling of law,[12] and a fact or question in issue in a former suit and there judicially determined is conclusively settled as far as concerns the same parties, so that it may not again be litigated in the court of claims.[13] Where a case has been decided by the court of claims and affirmed by the supreme court, it becomes res judicata of the questions involved and will not be reopened, even though a subsequent act of congress purportedly gives the court jurisdiction to do so.[14] Dismissal of a claim for insufficiency of evidence does not preclude filing of a similar claim at a later period when the evidence may be sufficient to support it,[15] and a judgment

Filing of survey and execution of deed

Where damages are awarded for overflowing and permanently rendering worthless plaintiff's lands by government work, in improvement of navigation, payment of the judgment will be suspended until plaintiff files a survey of such lands and executes a good and sufficient deed therefor to the United States.—Morrell v. Computation of rental allowance concluded

(1) Where computation by comptroller general, submitted pursuant to a call by plaintiff under Judicial Code § 164, 28 U.S.C.A. § 272, was accepted by plaintiff and he files a motion for judgment conforming with such computation, the correctness of which was not questioned, and judgment in accordance therewith was entered, plaintiff is precluded from maintaining a new suit, notwithstanding his evidence in the prior case failed to show the correct amount.—Ruf v. U. S., supra.

(2) Where the comptroller general was in error in not including an increased rental allowance for a particular period, this does not give rise to a new question which will sustain a new suit, where the comptroller general was plaintiff's witness in the prior suit and plaintiff was bound by his evidence.—Ruf v. U. S., supra.

Particular items

(1) Items of a claim that were included in a prior suit in court of claims, in which judgment was rendered, are res judicata, and there can be recovery thereon.—Southern Pac. Co. v. U. S., 59 Ct.Cl. 97—St. Louis, B. & M. Ry. Co. v. U. S., 59 Ct.Cl. 82, affirmed in part and reversed in part on other grounds 45 S.Ct. 472, 268 U. S. 169, 69 L.Ed. 472.

(2) Items formerly sued on, but abandoned, could not be again declared on in a subsequent action, and items accruing before the commencement of the former action were within the allegations of the petition in that case, were properly to be declared on therein, and, in absence of a proper showing, could not be declared on subsequently.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. U. S., 54 Ct.Cl. 161.

Setting up two causes of action and proving one

Where plaintiff filed a petition alleging two causes of action, one of which is established by proof and as to the other of which no proof is offered, and judgment is rendered thereon, and same is paid by appropriation of congress, and received without protest, other cause of action is res judicata, and cannot be made subject matter of a subsequent suit it being assumed that the same subject matter is involved.—Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Renewal of claim after lapse of years

Fact that the evidence was insufficient in 1905, at a prior suit by claimant, to show an abiding purpose on the part of the government to discharge coast defense guns across claimant's land at will, does not show that it may not be sufficient in 1922.—Portsmouth Harbor Land & Hotel Co. v. U. S., 43 S.Ct. 135, 260 U.S. 327, 67 L.Ed. 287, reversing 56 Ct.Cl. 494.

§ 354. New Trial

a. On motion of claimant
b. On motion of United States

a. On Motion of Claimant

The court of claims may grant plaintiff's motion for new trial where timely made and supported by a proper showing of the existence of sufficient grounds, and may in its discretion entertain subsequent motions, although a rule permitting subsequent motions is not to be construed as allowing an unlimited number of such motions, and a subsequent motion made on grounds already found insufficient on a prior motion may be denied.

When judgment is rendered against a claimant, the court may grant a new trial on timely motion[17] and a proper showing[18] for any reason which, by the rules of common law or chancery in suits between individuals, would furnish sufficient ground for granting a new trial.[19]

Amended and subsequent motions. An amendment striking nonessential matter does not impair the motion.[20] The court of claims may in its discretion permit the filing of a second motion for a new trial on a showing that the court has inadvertently committed some error or on other adequate ground, although the motion is tardily made under the rules,[21] but, in the absence of such a showing, the motion will be overruled.[22] Where a subsequent motion for new trial is made under the same circumstances and based on the same grounds as one previously denied, denial of the prior motion renders the matter res judicata,[23] and the court lacks jurisdiction to consider the subsequent motion repeated on the same grounds.[24] A rule limiting the number of motions for new trial except by leave of court will not be construed as permissive of innumerable motions with such permission.[25]

b. On Motion of United States

On motion of the United States a new trial may be granted under the rules of the court or on grounds specified in the Judicial Code, as for fraud, wrong, or injustice done the United States.

The United States may as of right and without prior leave of court move for a new trial under the provisions of Judicial Code § 175, 28 U.S.C.A. § 282,[26] which permits the granting of a new trial on due showing of fraud, wrong, or injustice done the United States. On such a motion the court may in its discretion[27] stay judgment and grant a new trial at any time within the period prescribed by the statute,[28] even though an appeal is then pending in the supreme court,[29] and on due showing of the statutory grounds of fraud, wrong, or injustice done the United States.[30] The injustice warranting a new trial under this section must be a legal injustice, and the word "injustice" will not be so construed as to permit grant of a new trial where a carefully prepared and considered judgment has been rendered against the United States which the government law officers deem to be unsound, as such a judgment, if erroneous, may be corrected on appeal.[31] The motion will be denied where the proof fails to show the existence of the statutory grounds.[32]

Under rules. In a proper case a motion for new trial may be granted on application of the United States under the rules of court.[33]

XVI. CONCURRENT AND CONFLICTING JURISDICTION

§ 355. In General

a. Jurisdiction of particular courts
b. Priority of jurisdiction
c. Property in custodia legis

a. Jurisdiction of Particular Courts

Questions as to concurrent and conflicting jurisdiction between the various inferior federal courts and between such courts and the supreme court are governed by the provisions of the federal Constitution and the acts of congress.

The jurisdiction of particular federal courts, such as the district courts[34] or the customs court,[35] as to cases of a particular character is exclusive where made so by act of congress. However, the mere grant of jurisdiction to a particular court does not alone imply that its jurisdiction shall be exclusive.[36] Where a court has exclusive jurisdiction, the fact that relief is denied in the proper forum will not confer jurisdiction on another court.[37] The federal district court in one state exercises jurisdiction independent of, and under sovereignty different from, sovereignty of another state.[38]

Actions to which state is a party. The original jurisdiction conferred on the supreme court by the constitution in an action to which the state is a party is not exclusive where congress has indicated an intention to confer jurisdiction on other courts,[39] as by statutes conferring a concurrent jurisdiction with respect to such an action on the district courts.[40]

Claims against the United States. Most cases against the United States are settled in the court of claims[41] and, under statutes giving the consent of the United States to be sued on certain claims only in the court of claims, the jurisdiction of such court is exclusive;[42] but the fact that the court of claims is given jurisdiction over certain claims against the United States does not prevent concurrent jurisdiction over such claims being granted to the district courts,[43] and statutes conferring concurrent jurisdiction of such claims on the district courts and the court of claims have been applied in a number of cases.[44]

Crimes and offenses against the United States. The statutory grant of original jurisdiction to district courts of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States is not an unconstitutional intrusion on the original jurisdiction of the supreme court under the constitution, but is merely a valid grant of concurrent jurisdiction.[45]

Statute strictly construed

U.S.—U. S. v. Sherwood, N.Y., 61 S. Ct. 767, 312 U.S. 584, 85 L.Ed. 1058, reversing, C.C.A., Sherwood v. U. S., 112 F.2d 587, certiorari granted U. S. v. Sherwood, 61 S.Ct. 171, 311 U.S. 640, 85 L.Ed. 408.

The purpose of statute giving district courts concurrent jurisdiction with court of claims over claims against the United States is to provide additional opportunity for determination of claims and to permit suit to be brought in district where parties reside, and statute manifests intent to provide adequate opportunity for expeditious and orderly determination of such claims, expanding jurisdiction of court of claims and giving district courts general authority to hear and determine such claims. It creates an integrated jurisdictional plan, whose essential features are uniformity and equality in substantial rights and privileges.—Bates Mfg. Co. v. U. S., Mass., 58 S.Ct. 694, 303 U.S. 567, 82 L.Ed. 1020, reversing, C.C.A., 93 F.2d 721, affirming 19 F.Supp. 526, certiorari granted 58 S.Ct. 521, 303 U.S. 628, 82 L.Ed. 1089.

Jurisdiction of district court limited by that of court of claims

The provisions of the Tucker Act conferring jurisdiction on the district courts concurrent with the court of claims of claims on any contract with the United States or for damages in cases not sounding in tort does no more than authorize a district court to sit as a court of claims, and the authority thus given to adjudicate claims against the United States does not extend to any action which could not be maintained in the court of claims.—U. S. v. Sherwood, N.Y., 61 S.Ct. 767, 312 U.S. 584, 85 L.Ed. 1058, reversing, C.C.A., Sherwood v. U. S., 112 F.2d 587, certiorari granted U. S. v. Suits against government and agent of government

(1) Jud.Code § 154, 28 U.S.C.A. § 260, forbidding prosecution in court of claims of any claim for which suit is pending in any other court against an agent of the government, was held not to forbid suit in court of claims where another suit against government itself was pending in another court on same cause of action.—Matson Nav. Co. v. U. S., 52 S.Ct. 162, 284 U.S. 352, 76 L.Ed. 336, affirming 72 Ct.Cl. 210, certiorari granted 52 S.Ct. 11, 284 U.S. 600, 76 L.Ed. 515.

(2) But where the only distinction between two suits, one instituted in the United States district court against an agent of the United States and the other instituted in the court of claims against the United States, was that the action in the district court was made to sound in tort and the action in the court of claims was alleged on contract, the facts existing and operating in both cases being the same, it was held that under such statute and the decision in Corona Coal Co. v. U. S., 44 S.Ct. 156, 263 U.S. 537, 68 L.Ed. 431, the court of claims was without jurisdiction, the case in the district court having been prosecuted to a conclusion.—British American Tobacco Co. v. U. S., 89 Ct.Cl. 438, certiorari denied 60 S.Ct. 974, 310 U.S. 627, 84 L.Ed. 1398.

Review of administrative boards and commissions. The exclusive statutory jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals to review orders of various administrative boards and commissions has been upheld in a number of cases.[46] The original jurisdiction acquired by the circuit court of appeals in actions involving the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq, is exclusively with respect to provisions authorizing such court to enforce, modify, or set aside orders of the board,[47] and an action against the government to recover moneys paid to the federal treasury pursuant to an order of the board directing payment was properly brought in the district court, and not in the circuit court of appeals.[48]

District court and island territorial courts. With respect to matters which may be within the jurisdiction of either court, the United States district court and the island territorial courts stand on an equality, there being no question of relative dignity between them, and the court which first acquires jurisdiction will retain it.[49]

United States court for China. The United States court for China had jurisdiction concurrent with that of the consular courts within their limits.[50]

b. Priority of Jurisdiction

Where actions between the same parties relating to the same subject matter are instituted in different federal courts of concurrent jurisdiction, the court which first acquired jurisdiction will ordinarily retain it and dispose of the entire controversy.

Where actions between the same parties or their privies, relating to the same subject matter, are instituted in different United States courts of concurrent jurisdiction, the court which first acquired jurisdiction of the parties and the cause of action is entitled to retain such jurisdiction and dispose of the entire controversy.[51] In applying this rule, however, the courts are not at liberty to disregard

Commencement of suit as controlling
Priority between courts in point of jurisdiction depends not on day when property comes into their possession, but on day of commencement of first suit in which possession can be taken.—Emil v. Hanley, C.C.A.N.Y., 130 F.2d 369, affirming, D.C., In re John M. Russell, Inc., 43 F.Supp. 128.

Suits for declaratory judgment and patent infringement
(1) Where a federal district court had acquired jurisdiction of plaintiff's action for declaratory judgment as to validity and infringement of defendant's patents before defendant filed an infringement suit involving same patents in another federal district court against plaintiff and plaintiff's customer, which allegedly sold infringing articles, the former court was bound to adjudicate the controversy and to restrain defendant from prosecuting infringement suit until after action for declaratory judgment had been decided.—Triangle Conduit & Cable Co. v. National Electric Products Corporation, C.C.A.Del., 125 F.2d 1008, reversing, D.C., 38 F.Supp. 533, certiorari denied 62 S.Ct. 1046, 316 U.S. 676, 86 L.Ed. 1750—Crosley Corporation v. Hazeltine Corporation, C.C.A.Del., 122 F.2d 925, reversing, D.C., 38 F.Supp. 38.

(2) Where suit for declaratory judgment was filed on June 13, 1938, and patent infringement suit was filed June 29, 1938, jurisdiction of rights which the law assures to litigants,[52] and comity between courts should always yield to justice.[53] To prevent a conflict between two courts of equal dignity, it is within the discretion of one of them to dismiss the proceeding before it.[54] Where, in proceedings in a federal court of one state, a decree of foreclosure rendered in a federal court of another state is ratified, with a reservation by the former court of certain rights as to the distribution of funds and the priority of liens, such court may determine the priority of claims filed therein on a judgment recovered in such state over the lien of the mortgage,[55] and, where a prisoner is under arrest under the process of a federal court, the jurisdiction of such court must be respected by other federal courts.[56]

The general rule does not extend so far as to preclude actions in different courts, between different parties, even though the same subject matter may be involved, where the court in which the first action was brought could not determine the matters involved in the second action.[57] A fortiori, where the jurisdiction of one federal court has terminated, a subsequent suit relating to the same subject matter may be brought in another federal court.[58]

c. Property in Custodia Legis

Property in the possession of a federal court cannot, without the consent of such court, be interfered with by another federal court of concurrent jurisdiction.

A federal court which has in its possession, control, or equivalent dominion property or funds involved in litigation may exercise exclusive jurisdiction over such property or funds to determine the rights therein, and another federal court of concurrent or coördinate jurisdiction cannot interfere with such possession or control.[59] Accordingly in the infringement suit could not be retained because answer and counterclaim in declaratory judgment suit were not filed until Aug. 5, 1938, whereas answer in patent infringement suit was filed July 28, 1938, since jurisdiction becomes effective from filing of complaint.—Milwaukee Gas Specialty Co. v. Mercoid Corporation, C.C.A.Ill., 104 F.2d 589.

(3) So, where action for declaratory judgment was filed one day before actions for infringement first court erred in refusing to enjoin prosecution of infringement actions and in ordering declaratory action's removal from trial list pending disposition of infringement actions.—Crosley Corporation v. Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., C.C.A. Pa., 130 F.2d 474, reversing, D.C., 43 F.Supp. 690.

(4) However, the fact that appeal was pending from decree of court of one district dismissing alleged infringer's declaratory judgment suit against patentee was held not to deprive patentee of its statutory right to sue alleged infringer in another district for patent infringement, and whether patentee should be permitted to pursue that remedy after suit brought rested in court's sound discretion.—Cold Metal Process Co. v. E. W. Bliss Co., D.C.Del., 21 F.Supp. 509.

Nature of rule

The general rule that court first acquiring jurisdiction maintains jurisdiction until its duty is fully performed and jurisdiction is exhausted is not only rule of comity to prevent unseemly conflicts between courts, but is principle of law and of necessity leaving nothing to discretion or mere convenience.—Milwaukee Gas Specialty Co. v. Mercoid Corporation, C.C.A.Ill., 104 F.2d 589.

Consideration of impleaded records

In mortgagees' suit in federal equity court to impose trust on proceeds of sale of vessel received by nonmaritime mortgage claimant in admiralty proceeding pending in same district court, such court could consider records, papers, and pleadings in admiralty cause, expressly impleaded by such claimant's answer, in determining whether jurisdiction in rem was acquired in admiralty proceeding.—Criscuolo v. "Custodia legis," whether in the bankruptcy or any other court, means that the jurisdiction of the court having custody of the res is exclusive in so far as restrictions may be necessarily imposed on other courts for the proper control and disposition of the res by the court having custody and control of it.—National Automatic Tool Co. v. Goldie, D.C.Minn., 27 F.Supp. 399.

Custody of customs collector

the absence of statute, money or property in custody of the law is not subject to attachment or garnishment issuing from another court.[60] The court having custody of a res may, however, authorize the commencement of suit in another court as well as limit the extent to which another court's jurisdiction may go,[61] and property in its possession may, with the consent of the court, be subject to attachment or garnishment issuing from another court after the purpose for which it was taken into custody has ceased.[62]

§ 356. Appointment of Receiver

Although it may appoint an ancillary receiver, a federal court cannot interfere with the possession of property by a receiver appointed by another federal court of coördinate jurisdiction.

The possession by a receiver of the property involved in a suit, where he has been appointed by a federal court, cannot be interfered with by another federal court of coördinate jurisdiction.[63] Ancillary receivers may, however, be appointed in another district;[64] and where a claim is made by a citizen of a state in the federal court for such state against an insolvent corporation, which is in the hands of a receiver appointed by a federal court for another state, the former court may assume jurisdiction to the extent of determining the existence and amount of such claim.[65] Whether the receivership is original or ancillary, the court of the locality of the property has exclusive jurisdiction over its administration,[66] and, where an ancillary receiver has been appointed, any order made by any other court to its own receiver or to the ancillary receiver to sell property located in the jurisdiction of the ancillary receivership is void on its face[67] and incapable of confirmation in the jurisdiction where the property is located.[68] So, where the court appointing ancillary receivers has no assets in the hands of its receivers, it has no power or duty to order its receivers to join in a sale.[69] The court appointing the receivers has jurisdiction of a suit by receivers of a railway company to enjoin the enforcement of unreasonable rates even though there is pending in another court of coördinate jurisdiction a suit by various railway companies, including plaintiff, involving some of the same issues.[70] Where a receiver of a bank was appointed after institution of proceedings by the trustee of a bankrupt against the bank to recover preferences, the fact that the receiver did not know of the proceeding until the comptroller of currency received a mailed copy of a decree ordering him to deliver collateral deposited with the bank by the bankrupt did not affect the binding force of the decree on the receiver.[71] or proceeding in one federal court may be entertained by another federal court.

One federal court may entertain proceedings which are properly ancillary to an action or proceeding in another federal court, as this is not an interference with, but an aid to, the jurisdiction of the court in which the main action is pending;[72] but, where a judgment has been rendered in a court of claims, interest thereon cannot be recovered in the United States circuit court, the question being incidental to the original suit and one for the former court to determine.[73]

§ 358. Injunction against Proceedings

A federal court first acquiring jurisdiction may enjoin a second suit in another federal court involving the identical subject matter, wherein it is sought to defeat the first court's jurisdiction; and an order restraining prosecution of the second suit may be granted by the court in which it is pending.

A party seeking, in one federal court, to enjoin a suit in another federal court of concurrent jurisdiction must show a clear and indubitable right on his part.[74] A federal court first acquiring jurisdiction over the subject matter may enjoin a second suit in another federal court involving the identical subject matter, wherein it is sought to defeat the first court's jurisdiction;[75] and refusal to exercise this power in a proper case constitutes an abuse of discretion.[76] Where the petition for injunction was not an independent action but was merely ancillary to the original action, and plaintiff in the original action and its legal representatives were already in court, due notice of the supplementary proceeding could be given without reference to their citizenship or residence, regardless of the fact that the original counsel had been succeeded by others.[77] An injunction will not be granted, however, unless the suits are substantially identical in subject matter and issues,[78] and it will be denied where the suits were dissimilar with respect to parties defendant, subject matter, issues, and relief sought,[79] nor is it a sufficient ground for

Tax sale
Where federal court in Florida in receivership of lessor railroad directed its receiver to disaffirm lease and permit the comptroller of the state of Florida to proceed with enforcement of tax liens against the leased property in Florida, federal court in Georgia was held not without jurisdiction to enjoin tax sale of leased property located in Florida belonging to lessee railroad in receivership in Georgia court, on ground that decree appointing receivers and authorizing them to take possession of property directed them not to take possession of leased premises until further order of court, where decree indicated court's purpose to take as full control of leased property as was possessed by lessor and restriction merely withheld power to terminate lease or take possession of leased property.—Lee v. an injunction that it would be inconvenient for defendant in the first suit to defend the second.[80] Where proceedings in one district, on which an execution was founded, were void, the court of another district had jurisdiction to restrain the marshal of its own district from enforcing and collecting such execution from property owned by the resident debtor located therein.[81]

Where two suits in different federal courts of concurrent jurisdiction involve the same subject matter and parties, defendant's petition in the second suit for a temporary injunction restraining prosecution of that suit pending final determination of the first suit shouid be granted.[82]

§ 359. Vacating or Annulling Decisions of Another Court

One judge may not overrule the decision of another judge of coördinate jurisdiction in the same case or decide an issue already submitted to such other judge except for cogent reasons; and a judgment entered by a court of competent jurisdiction respecting a matter in controversy before it may not be reviewed by another court of coordinate jurisdiction.

It is highly indiscreet and injudicious for one judge of equal rank and power to review identical matters passed on by his colleague,[83] and one judge may not overrule the decision of another judge of coördinate jurisdiction in the same case,[84] or decide an issue already submitted to such other judge,[85] except for cogent reasons.[86] The "law of the case" when referring to a judge's duty to adhere to rulings previously made in the case by another judge of the same court merely requires that the order of the first judge, unless merely a formal or an ex parte order, shall not be vacated or nullified by a later judge of the same court.[87] The rule applies to orders and rulings of the court which are purely

Review in bankruptcy of matters determined at law

District judge's rulings in law action between same parties for rentals under same indentures as those involved in subsequent bankruptcy proceeding are binding, as far as applicable, on another judge of same district court sitting in bankruptcy.—In re American Writing Paper Co., D.C.Mass., 11 F.Supp. 518, affirmed, C.C.A., Holyoke Water Power Co. v. American Writing Paper Co., 83 F.2d 398, certiorari granted 57 S.Ct. 24, 299 U.S. 526, 81 L.Ed. 387, affirmed 57 S.Ct. 485, 300 U.S. 324, 81 L.Ed. 678.

Legality of proceedings

District court has no power to consider legality of proceedings in another district court of coördinate jurisdiction.—In re Sierra Salt Corporation, D.C.Nev., 8 F.Supp. 922.
